PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 103d CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Friday, August 12, 1994

The House met at 10 a.m.

The Reverend Harry F. Andrews, Unity United Methodist Church, Kannapolis, NC, offered the following prayer:

Almighty and everlasting God, we once again summon You to this great Hall of debate and legislative creativity. Challenge us to tolerate each other's idiosyncrasies, remind us to love our neighbor as ourselves, and when all else fails, encourage us to agree to disagree. As we consider in what direction our constituents would want us to go on the issues of crime, health care, and world peace, open our hearts and minds to the opinions of others. We suspect that You are annoyed with some of the stuff we have approved since our Nation was born, but we ask this morning that You continue to annoy us with Your omnipotence, until we get it right. Strengthen us, humble us, bless us, affirm us, love us. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

PLEDGE OF ALLEGIANCE

The SPEAKER. The gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. HEFNER] will lead us in the Pledge of Allegiance.

Mr. HEFNER led the Pledge of Allegiance as follows:

> I pledge allegiance to the Flag of the United States of America, and to the Republic for which it stands, one nation under God, indivisible, with liberty and justice for all.

WELCOME TO REV. HARRY F. ANDREWS

(Mr. HEFNER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HEFNER. Mr. Speaker, it is a real pleasure to have Reverend Andrews and his wife and his lovely daughter, Jennifer, who has been a page here for some time; and I understand that he left North Carolina last night about 11 o'clock to get here in time for the prayer today. I tell you, that has got to be real dedication.

We are just more than happy to have you here today. With that beautiful prayer, I wish you could stay around and make things more palatable for us today.

Again, I want to thank you for your dedication to come here and share these few moments with us. Thank you very much.

A QUESTION OF PROPRIETY

(Mr. LINDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. LINDER. Mr. Speaker, the Constitution of the United States of America, section 7 states "All Bills for raising revenue shall originate in the House of Representatives."

So why has the other body been allowed to send us an appropriations bill with brand new revenue raisers in it?

On Wednesday, the House allowed the other body to get away with this unconstitutional act in the State, Commerce, Justice appropriations bill.

The Senate has tried this before, but has never been able to pull it off. The House has always stood firm in protecting its constitutional rights and duties.

I understand why the House majority has allowed this to happen. Chaffing under the tough budget laws of the land, the Democrat majority would rather sacrifice constitutional prerogatives to spend more money and raise more taxes.

I want to put the House on notice that if the Democratic majority refuses to stand with the traditions and constitutional powers of the House, I will stand up to defend them.

And if the Agriculture appropriations bill or other appropriations bills have unconstitutional revenues in them, I will pursue a question of privilege to the House to send these bills back to other body.

THE POLITICS OF GUNS

(Mr. TRAFICANT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TRAFICANT. Mr. Speaker, there is an old axiom in war and in politics: Good generals keep their soldiers fighting and fit. But good generals never lead their good fighting soldiers into unnecessary danger.

I voted for that rule. I believe our party's leadership should be questioned. I do not want anybody to take away my guns, but that was a vote about politics, the politics of guns. If there are any liberal attempts to take away guns, I will oppose any further bills, but a Congress that cannot deal with the politics of guns cannot deal with the safety of the American people.

And the Democrat leadership, and I am not the most well-liked guy in this place, has got to look in the mirror and answer some questions to all Democrats all over this country, not just in this little closet.

LET US PRESENT A BIPARTISAN CRIME BILL

(Mr. GINGRICH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, we are at a crossroads where there is an opportunity, I believe, to set a new tone and undertake a new direction for the rest of this Congress.

It is clear that yesterday's vote to return the crime bill to the conference committee, to reject the rule, is an opportunity either for the Clinton administration to try to twist arms and find a few more votes without change, or take a big step toward bipartisanship, go back into the conference, write a better bill, and with our help, have a bipartisan effort to bring that bill to the floor.

☐ This symbol represents the time of day during the House proceedings, e.g., ☐ 1407 is 2:07 p.m.

Matter set in this typeface indicates words inserted or appended, rather than spoken, by a Member of the House on the floor.

I simply want to rise today to urge the Democratic leadership of the Congress and the President to take the bipartisan route, to accept the vote yesterday of the House, to sit down and let us reopen the conference. Let us write a better crime bill. Let us bring it to the floor together on a bipartisan basis, and let us pass it by a big majority.

Then let us approach health in the same kind of open and bipartisan manner.

AMERICA WANTS THIS CRIME BILL

(Mrs. SCHROEDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, I am a little perplexed by what was meant by the statement that I am following.

If we look at the crime bill, there were 68 Republicans that voted for it, and yet we did not have but 11 votes for the rule yesterday.

This was nothing but a conference committee that was not only bipartisan in attendance but bicameral, working out the difference between the Senate side and the House side, with both Republicans and Democrats in there. So this was just the final throes.

I do not know how you reopen the entire crime bill. I think there were some very important parts that were fought out on this floor. There was the assault weapons part which many got very upset about, but we won it. It was on the floor. It went fair and square.

And then I heard yesterday all sorts of noise about pork and social workers, and on and on. The only social workers I found in the bill were dealing with the Violence Against Women Act which all of us thought was so important, and it passed almost unanimously in this House. It was for the 1-800 number that we would have for the first time for families in crisis and for shelters for battered families. We have three times as many, now, for dogs and cats as we have battered families.

Yes, you probably need some social workers in those things, but those are needed areas, and if we do not solve the domestic terrorism in the home, we are never going to stop violence on the street. Those are all important components.

So I hope we can work this out and pass this crime bill. I think America wants this crime bill, but I hope we can also do it in a much lower, lower tone and not have the bipartisan rancoring we saw.

PERMISSION TO FILE CONFERENCE REPORT ON S. 2182, NATIONAL DEFENSE AUTHORIZATION ACT FOR FISCAL YEAR 1995

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I have cleared this unanimous-consent request with the Republican side.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the managers may have until midnight tonight, August 12, 1994, to file a conference report on the Senate bill, S. 2182, to authorize appropriations for fiscal year 1995 for military activities of the Department of Defense, for military construction, and for defense programs of the Department of Energy, to prescribe personnel strengths for such fiscal year for the Armed Forces, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

REOPENING THE CONFERENCE ON THE CRIME BILL

(Mr. GOSS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I would like to yield to the distinguished gentleman from Georgia [Mr. GINGRICH].

Mr. GINGRICH. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I just wanted to respond to the gentlewoman from Colorado that, first, you can reopen the conference by reopening a conference. The Members go back in. The House has, in fact, set the stage for that to occur by rejecting the rule and refusing to take up the bill.

Second, the House bill left here with $22 billion in total spending, the Senate bill left at $26 billion. They got together at $33 billion. So when people say that it is exactly the same bill people voted for, let us be honest about it, this is not the same bill.

The sexual predator notification provision was weakened in conference. That is a very vital issue to Members who believe that when sexual predators are released from prison and released into your community, that you have a right to know about it.

Of course, the recent tragic kidnaping, rape, and murder of the 7-year-old girl in New Jersey drives that home. That was a twice-convicted sexual predator. This bill in its current form will protect the sexual predator's right to privacy rather than protecting that young girl's right to safety.

So where there are substantive policy differences, we can go back to conference, we can, in fact, rewrite this bill. We would like on our side to work in a bipartisan manner to write a good crime bill.

I thank my friend for yielding.

Mr. GOSS. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman, and I associate myself with the remarks of the distinguished gentleman from Georgia.

HEALTH CARE REFORM FOR FAMILIES

(Mr. DERRICK asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, the health care status quo in America exacts a cruel price from American families. Today it costs nearly $8,000 a year to provide insurance for a family of four. If we fail to pass health care reform this year, the average family will be paying $14,000 for health care coverage by the year 2000.

Families need health care reform to remedy this unacceptable situation. That is why groups working on behalf of America's families are voicing their support for the Guaranteed Health Insurance Act—they recognize that it is good for the American family. Groups like Families USA, the Children's Defense Fund, Family Service America Inc., and the Child Welfare League support the Gephardt reform bill.

Perpetuating a scenario that doubles the costs of health care for families by the end of the century is nothing but unacceptable. Vote for health care reform and stop this drain on the strength of American families.

HEALTH CARE REFORM: WHY THE RUSH?

(Mr. HEFLEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HEFLEY. Mr. Speaker, as public support drops through the floor for the Clinton health care plan, due to its call for a huge new bureaucracy and job-killing mandates, the Democrat leadership has decided to appear to present a whole new bill to the House, the Gephardt health care plan.

Mr. Speaker, just as things are never as they appear, the legislation to be offered, the Clinton-Gephardt bill is nothing new.

The same huge new bureaucracy and job-killing mandates are included in this newly disguised package.

The House Democrat leadership thinks that a name change will fool the American people; well, it will not.

Mr. Speaker, why the rush to crowd this in in August? It appears to me that the Democrat leadership is terrified that we might go back to the people we are supposed to represent and we might get their opinion and we might come back and see the Gephardt-Clinton plan for what it is.

INDEPENDENT COUNSEL LAWS: THE UPS AND THE DOWNS

(Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FRANK of Massachusetts. Mr. Speaker, the Republicans had a dilemma. For years they were trying to keep the independent counsel law from being authorized, but the political pressure became too strong. Now we know what their strategy is: It is to make it look ridiculous by their own actions. Look at what has happened with regard to the Whitewater issue:

First, the Republicans insisted that Janet Reno's—well, first, the Republicans killed the independent counsel law in 1992. Then they insisted that Janet Reno appoint someone, even though the law was killed. Then they criticized her because she did the appointment and did not have it done by the mechanism that they had killed. Then they got a Republican judge to appoint as an independent counsel a high-ranking official of the Bush and Reagan administrations, Mr. Starr, who is the most inappropriate independent counsel ever appointed, from the standpoint of bias.

Now it turns out that while conservative Republicans were crusading against fellow Republican, Mr. Fiske, the judge who was making the appointment was having lunch with the U.S. Senators who were the major critics and were urging him to change the appointment.

Now, Republican friends have said in the Whitewater case maybe the President did not do anything wrong, but the appearance standard was violated. Nobody has violated the appearance standard more than they have done in this instance.

THAT WACKY DEMOCRAT HEALTH CARE PLAN

(Mr. BALLENGER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BALLENGER. Mr. Speaker, this from the Richmond Times-Dispatch:

> On a recent day, the House Ways and Means Committee endorsed legislation to impose global spending caps on every state in the nation. If any state exceeded its federally designated limit on health care spending, price controls would take effect.
>
> On the same day, the same committee passed proposals to (a) double the tax on self-insurance premiums, and (b) reduce the income tax deduction for a self-employed person's health insurance premiums.

Parenthetically, the Times-Dispatch adds:

> Such tax hikes on independence could help Congress corral the public into collectives, which may be the point of the exercise.

The editorial goes on:

> But obviously, taxing a good or service adds to its cost. So with one hand, the Congressmen voted to keep health care costs down, and with the other, they voted to increase health care costs.
>
> Good luck trying to figure that out.

Mr. Speaker, I am having a tough time figuring out the logic of the Democrat health care plan. And, so, I suspect, are the American people.

THE HEALTH CARE PLAN: LET US MEET WITH OUR PEOPLE FIRST

(Mr. THOMAS of Wyoming asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. THOMAS of Wyoming. Mr. Speaker, this is a representative Government. This House is designed to send people here to represent the folks at home. It means that it is part of our job to spend as much time as possible at home talking and listening to the folks that we represent.

Yesterday the President said he did not think the Congress should take a vacation. Vacation? Give me a break.

We go home and spend every day of that time meeting with people, in my case, in Wyoming, talking about how they feel about health care, how they feel about gun control, how they feel about the crime bill.

Every August this opportunity arises for an extended time to go home and talk to folks. It is important. It is especially important this year, it seems to me.

The administration has had a full-court press on trying to do something about a health care bill, any health care bill as long as it is passed, for political cover.

The leadership of this House has brought forth a number of bills, none of which has been scored as to their costs or as to who will pay for them.

Mr. Speaker, we need to go home and talk to the folks and come back and deal with health care then.

PRICE CONTROLS

(Mr. SAM JOHNSON of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SAM JOHNSON of Texas. Mr. Speaker, the Clinton-Gephardt and Clinton-Mitchell plans are all about the Government controlling our health care. Today, I would like to highlight some of the price controls they impose.

The Clinton-Mitchell bill which costs $1 trillion taxes your health insurance plans whose premiums grow at rates faster than the Government prescribes. The Clinton-Gephardt plan creates a national cost containment commission to impose regulations to keep costs down. Price controls never have worked and they will not work now.

What this really means is Americans will be taxed and give up some of the services you need.

This is the Clinton plan for total Government control. But, America will not be fooled; they know the difference between myth and reality.

REPUBLICANS HAVE COOPERATED IN THE PAST AND WANT TO DO SO AGAIN

(Mr. WELDON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WELDON. Mr. Speaker, I watched the temper tantrum of the President last night, and I got sick to my stomach. You might think he is the only one in America who is concerned about crime. Those who voted "no" on the rule are uncaring and obstructionist and partisan.

Mr. President, let me tell you, I broke ranks with my party over the past few years over the Brady bill, family and medical leave, striker replacement, campaign finance reform, California desert protection, grazing, and mining issues. And I saved Vice President GORE's globe program.

This President's definition of bipartisanship is when you do what he wants all the time.

Mr. President, you are no longer in Arkansas. Bipartisanship means working together. We are ready to work on crime, are you?

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). The Chair would like to remind Members to please address the Chair and not the President of the United States.

MORE THOUGHTS ON THE CRIME BILL VOTE

(Mr. SCHUMER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. Speaker, yesterday an unholy alliance of the National Rifle Association and the Republican leadership insulted the American people by viciously assaulting the crime bill. Mr. Speaker, today the weapon of choice is the telephone. The American people should not be fooled by this political mugging.

Yesterday's vote was not about pork; yesterday's vote was about two things: Partisan politics and the ban on assault weapons.

☐ 1020

The proof is in the records of this House. Sixty-five Republicans voted for the crime bill last April when it had more prevention than the crime bill that reached the floor today. Where were those 65 yesterday? What changed? Was it the relentless bullying by the NRA and opportunism of the Republican leadership?

I say to the American people, "We must strike back, and the weapon of choice is the telephone. Call, call, call.

Call your Member of Congress and tell them you want this crime bill now. Do not suffer this insult in silence. Make your voice heard.''

THE CLINTON HEALTH BILLS ARE SOCIALISTIC

(Mr. DOOLITTLE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DOOLITTLE. Mr. Speaker, Dr. Martin Feldstein in Tuesday's Wall Street Journal made the following comments about the President's health care bills. Dr. Feldstein is a professor of economics at Harvard. He said:

> President Clinton is increasing the pressure on Congress to enact a massive and irreversible entitlement program to subsidize health insurance and redistribute income. The tax cost for this largest-ever welfare expansion would top $100 billion a year at today's prices. That's equivalent to raising personal taxes across the board by nearly 20%.

Mr. Speaker, the Clinton health care bills are socialistic, and, in commenting on socialism, the great Winston Churchill said this:

> Socialism is the philosophy of failure, the creed of ignorance and the gospel of envy. Its inherent virtue is the equal sharing of misery.

Mr. Clinton, I would say to you, "I feel your pain."

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. (Mr. MONTGOMERY). Members have got to obey the rules. They cannot direct their remarks to the President of the United States. Direct them to the Chair.

This is the second time the Chair has had to call attention to this matter.

AMERICA IS WAITING FOR THIS HOUSE TO PASS A CRIME BILL

(Mr. DURBIN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DURBIN. Mr. Speaker, while the National Rifle Association was celebrating the defeat of the crime bill last night, thousands of policemen cruised the mean streets of America hoping some drug-crazed gangbanger would not make their wives widows. While most Republicans were cheering the defeat of the crime bill, families in St. Louis, Chicago, New York, and Springfield, IL, were praying their children would not be the victims of a drive-by shooting. The National Rifle Association and the Republicans succeeded in gridlocking Congress last night on the crime bill, but this House owes it to the police and to America to pass a crime bill.

President Clinton was right. Congress should not take a vacation until we pass a crime bill. Criminals do not take a vacation, and American families are still waiting for us to break the Republican gridlock on this critical bill.

PEACE FOR SALE

(Mr. CALLAHAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CALLAHAN. Mr. Speaker, I rose on this floor twice in recent weeks to express my grave concerns about forgiving Jordan's debt to the United States. I believed this form of extortion would set a dangerous and unaffordable precedent.

I never like to say "I told you so, "but before the ink has dried on Jordan's forgiveness, we are being set up again. Business Week reported this week that Syrian President Assad is pursuing peace talks with Israel for only one reason that has little to do with peace. Instead, his only interest is reported to be some type of cash payoff, perhaps something along the multibillion lines of the Camp David accords.

There is no question that a Syrian-Israeli peace agreement is in the United States interest. But we must question whether it is in our interest to agree to be blackmailed whenever our allies face problems with their neighbors.

We have made the decision to reward Jordan. Let us not go farther down this road. Our Secretary on State should just say "no" to this deal.

JUDGE SENTELLE'S CONFLICT OF INTEREST

(Mr. BONIOR asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BONIOR. Mr. Speaker, today's front page story in the Washington Post raises disturbing new questions about the decision to remove Judge Fiske from the Whitewater case.

First we learned that Judge Fiske was being replaced by a person who, in the past few months, has clearly taken partisan positions critical of the President.

Now we learn that the judge who led the decision to replace Judge Fiske, Judge David Sentelle, at the very time he was making the decision, met with two of the most partisan critics of Judge Fiske, two critics who have called for Judge Fiske's resignation again and again.

Mr. Speaker, this appears to be a clear, improper, and partisan manipulation of the judicial system.

Judge Sentelle's panel is supposed to be impartial.

The counsel he appoints is supposed to be independent.

For Judge Sentelle to meet with partisan members of the other body who have a political axe to grind in this case should be a subject of investigation itself.

Judge Sentelle said Fiske had to go because there appeared to be a conflict of interest. Well, it looks like Judge Sentelle has an ever greater conflict of interest of his own.

Having Judge Sentelle rule on the independent counsel is like having George Steinbrenner rule on the baseball strike.

DEMOCRATS' UNTOLD BENEFITS

(Mr. SMITH of Texas asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SMITH of Texas. Mr. Speaker, President Clinton and his allies are busy concocting benefits they can claim for their plan for a Government-run health care system.

But there is one benefit they could legitimately claim that millions of Americans will receive from the Clinton health care plan: unemployment benefits.

That is right, the employer mandates and big Government bureaucracy of the Clinton health plan will raise employers' costs and employees' unemployment.

How much will it add to the cost of doing business? According to the Heritage Foundation, it will cost businesses in my home State of Texas an additional $5.6 billion just by the year 2002 under the Clinton-Senate plan.

Under the Clinton-House plan, the costs are even higher. By 1999, it will raise the cost of doing business in Texas by $8 billion—or $1,200 per Texas employee.

Of course maybe the President has thought ahead. Perhaps being out of business and out of work will give these people time to wait in the long health care lines the President's plan will create.

WE ALL LOST

(Mr. OLVER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. OLVER. Mr. Speaker, we apparently will not hear baseball scores for a while, but here is the score from last night. Inside the Beltway gridlock: First, people who are afraid to leave their homes for fear of crime: Zero.

Mr. Speaker, last night's loss was more than just a vote on a rule. We all lost.

We lost protection for women and children who live with the nightmare of domestic violence. We lost a chance for kids to find more than a life of selling drugs on the street.

But our biggest loss was the 100,000 cops that would restore security to our communities. That is over 2,000 cops in my State of Massachusetts alone. We lost the most important tool communities need to fight crime.

The American people were rooting for this crime bill, Mr. Speaker. We all lost.

TV EXPOSÉ REVEALS RIPOFF OF TAXPAYERS BY FAA EMPLOYEES

(Mr. DUNCAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. DUNCAN. Mr. Speaker, last night, "Prime Time Live" carried a report about the FAA that I am sure angered everyone who saw it.

The report told how FAA employees in San Juan have been living in luxury hotels and condominiums for months at a time at taxpayer expense.

One family lived in hotel suites costing $360 per day and stayed at least 3 months.

This family, whose last name was Feeny, turned in expense accounts for meals totaling over $12,000 for just their first month in Puerto Rico, and the FAA paid them.

Their average claim for food ran to over $300 per day.

Another employee has claimed, and has been paid, approximately $5,000 per month for housing in Atlanta for almost a year now, even though he remains with the FAA in Puerto Rico.

An FAA employee who tried to blow the whistle on these padded expense accounts has resigned in disgust.

He says many millions have been spent by the FAA allowing their employees to claim and receive these exorbitant and ridiculous expenses.

No employee who has done the things reported by "Prime Time Live" should be allowed to work for the Government, in any capacity.

I call on the FAA to fire these employees immediately, and stop this taxpayer ripoff right now.

However, I know that due to our civil service system, nothing will be done and abuses like this will continue at the FAA and throughout the Federal Government.

NO INTENT FOUND TO DECEIVE CONGRESS ON VIRGINIA FACILITY FOR THE INTELLIGENCE COMMUNITY

(Mr. GLICKMAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Speaker, as chairman of the Intelligence Committee, I have been critical at times of the intelligence community's organization and management, but I come to the floor today to defend them on an allegation that was made by the Intelligence Committee of the other body regarding a building built by the National Reconnaissance Office in Virginia.

The allegation was made or inferred that in some way the intelligence community deceived Congress by never notifying us of this building. Yesterday we had a public hearing of the House Intelligence Committee in the Rayburn Building, and the fact of the matter is that while we may disagree with some of the procedures used by the National Reconnaissance Office, there was no intent to deceive Congress, and there was no intent to hide the facts or deceive the intelligence community or Congress with respect to that particular building.

This was a building that was designed several years ago, frankly, at the request of some Members of Congress and the intelligence community to consolidate the offices of the National Reconnaissance Office, which, up until 2 years ago, was actually a classified body. But the purpose of the consolidation was to close or consolidate many, many leased offices around the country that were costing the taxpayers a lot of money.

While we are going to look at the procedures used in the building and the contracting process and although we think the budgeting needs to be improved, I want to assure my colleagues that there was no intent to deceive Members of Congress in connection with that facility.

CRIME BILL DEFEATED BECAUSE BILL AND RULE FOUND WANTING

(Mr. EHLERS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. EHLERS. Mr. Speaker, I want to respond to some of the things I have heard discussed here this morning in regard to yesterday's vote on the rule to debate the crime bill. The statement has been made that the Republicans and the NRA defeated it. That is simply not true. The majority of the Members of this Chamber, of course, are Democrats, and 58 Democrats voted against it.

Personally, I did not hear anything from the NRA pro or con on the rule or the bill. I think we have to face the fact that it was a bad bill, and the rule was defeated because the rule prevented us from amending a bad bill and the rule prevented us from raising points of order against some of the pork and some of the bad features of the bill. That is why it was defeated.

I believe that with a rewritten bill, we will easily have a crime bill passed in this Chamber, and I think we have to stop pointing fingers of blame and simply say that we all want to do something about crime but we do not want a bill that is filled with pork and we do not want a bill that says it provides 100,000 policemen when in fact it only provides 20,000.

Mr. Speaker, I urge the conference committee to come back with a better bill, a bill that we can all support and vote for.

CONGRESS SHOULD LISTEN TO THE PEOPLE'S DESIRES ON CRIME AND HEALTH CARE LEGISLATION

(Mr. GRAMS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GRAMS. Mr. Speaker, last night the commonsense will of the American people prevailed as the so-called crime bill that was tough on taxpayers and soft on criminals was defeated.

As the crime bill goes back to conference for a much-needed facelift, the debate will shift to health care, and this Congress should heed some important lessons from the crime bill spectacle.

First, the American people do not like having their pockets picked. Just as the crime bill was a $9 billion social program pork fest, the Clinton-Gephardt health care bill contains 17 new taxes that Americans cannot afford, do not want, and will not tolerate.

Second, the American people do not like having bad bills rammed through Congress. Believe it or not, the 900-page crime bill we voted on last night was given to us yesterday morning. And wouldn't you know, the 700-page Clinton-Gephardt plan was made available less than 2 days ago. Health care reform is the most significant issue we have dealt with in years and the White House and Democrat leadership were going to try to slip it through, just like the crime bill.

Until last night, that is.

Maybe now instead of picking the pockets of Americans and ramming a huge government-run health care plan through Congress, we will listen to what the people are saying and pause and craft and pass targeted health care reforms.

A CALL FOR A COOPERATIVE EFFORT TO PASS A TOUGH CRIME BILL

(Mr. LEWIS of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, my colleague from New York, Mr. SCHUMER, has been on the airwaves saying that yesterday's defeat on the crime bill reflects a pincer movement between the NRA and the Republican leadership of the House. Mr. SCHUMER's intrepetation could not be farther from the truth.

It may be that Mr. SCHUMER's New York City district is much different than my district in California. It may be his people were crying out for the millions of dollars in spending in new untested social programs. It may be that they are not concerned about the provisions in that bill which provide for the early release of thousands of convicted drug traffickers.

The people in my district in California know that drug traffickers are a key and driving force behind the crime impacting our communities. My district is interested in a crime bill that truly deals with the repeat criminals in our society.

So I have come to the floor to agree with my colleague, Mr. SCHUMER, about two things. First, he is right: If the people effectively communicate with Members across the country, they will be heard, and telephone calls and letters can make a difference. Second, we should bring a crime bill back to the floor. So, let's do so by one simple action: Provide an open rule that will allow amendments to the bill that would truly reflect people's concerns. I am confident that open debate on such amendments would lead to a tough crime bill that would help guarantee safety in the cities and on the streets in neighborhoods in America.

Mr. President, I urge you to call upon the bipartisan leadership of this House to allow open debate through an open rule concerning crime in America.

POLITICAL TAINT DARKENED ON APPOINTMENT OF INDEPENDENT COUNSEL TO INVESTIGATE THE PRESIDENT

(Ms. NORTON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Ms. NORTON. Mr. Speaker, on the floor this week I criticized the baggage-of-appearance problems surrounding the appointment of Kenneth Starr to investigate the President. I thought then, though, that the furror and delay of yet another appointment augured for going on with the Starr appointment and assumed a heavy burden of demonstrating impartiality.

Following new revelations, however, it is clear that for his sake and for the sake of the court that appointed him, Starr should bow out. Partisan letters to the court and contacts between a particularly partisan Senator and the judge, David Sentelle, a protege of JESSE HELMS, now give the court an appearance problem.

The entire point of our independent-counsel legislation is to remove the investigation not only from political taint but from the appearance of political taint. That taint has now darkened. We need a new independent counsel and a new court to appoint her.

NEW JERSEY TRAGEDY POINTS UP NEED FOR TOUGH CRIME BILL

(Mr. CUNNINGHAM asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Mr. Speaker, I witnessed two things on television last night. One was where the parents of a little girl in New Jersey named Megan spoke. They buried her last week. A sexual predator who had been convicted twice before lured her into a house and sexually abused her and killed the little girl.

The gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHUMER] voted in committee for the sexual language and then in conference personally took out that language.

The second item I witnessed last night was Mr. SCHUMER blaming the loss of his bill on others. I say to the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHUMER] that Megan's parents asked administrators and anyone else to get in the face of the people who are weak on this issue and weak on crime. We do not want to get in the gentleman's face, but when you have $9 billion of socialized spending and your liberal special interest, the ACLU, wants you to take out language that would protect the Megans of the world, that is the reason why the crime bill failed yesterday.

CONSTITUENTS' PROTEST AGAINST CRIMINAL CODDLING BILL MAY BE KEY TO BILL'S FAILURE

(Mr. BARTLETT of Maryland asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. BARTLETT of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, it is far too simplistic to villainize the NRA and blame them for the failure of the crime-bill rule last evening. When this bill left the House, it had far too much pork in it. and it had a whole lot more when it returned.

When it left the House, it was aptly described as a "criminal coddling" bill, and one constituent called to ask us, "Please don't vote for the hug-a-thug bill" that was returned to us from conference.

A real reason that the bill failed was the rule itself and the fact that we did not have time to read this very large bill. But in the final analysis, the credit for killing this rule belongs to the American people who, in ever increasing numbers, called our offices to tell us, "Please don't vote for this bill."

DO NOT MISUSE THE INDEPENDENT LAW

(Mr. PENNY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PENNY. Mr. Speaker, I voted for the independent counsel law. I agree that we cannot expect an administration to investigate itself when there are allegations of wrongdoing. However, the use of the independent counsel process in the instance of Agriculture Secretary Mike Espy raises questions. As has been demonstrated over the years, these independent counsel investigations typically cost several hundred thousand dollars, some much more.

What was Secretary Espy's alleged misdeed? He evidently accepted a couple hundred dollars worth of travel, lodging, and sports events tickets from a food processing firm, and later reimbursed the firm for these costs.

Did Secretary Espy use bad judgment? Yes. Does this matter warrant an expensive legal investigation? I think not.

EPA SHOULD IMPLEMENT CLEAN AIR ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1990

(Mr. KIM asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. KIM. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to introduce three very important pieces of legislation intended to rectify an unfair application of the law. These bills will direct the Environmental Protection Agency to write Federal Implementation Plans in accordance with the 1990 Amendments to the Clean Air Act.

My reasons for introducing these measures are twofold. First, to alleviate an extremely unfair situation that is facing my State of California. Second, for the benefit of every other State in this Nation that is working hard to meet the goals set forth in the Clean Air Act.

The EPA is currently being forced to comply with a court order, which was handed down in 1993, 3 years after this Congress amended the Clean Air Act, which requires them to implement a Federal plan in accordance with the provisions of the 1977 act. I am deeply disturbed by this court decision, which neglects to recognize the intent of the 1990 amendments that place the responsibility of creating such plans squarely on the shoulders of the States, in recognition of the need to be flexible.

Additionally, the implementation of this Federal plan is to occur at the same time that California is working diligently to meet the requirements of the 1990 provisions. This makes the court's order all that more confusing. Why must the State of California comply with two versions of the same law?

It is with this question in mind that I rise before this House today to make it clear to the courts, the EPA and the States, that it is the intent of Congress to only require a State to comply with the latest version of the law. If this injustice is not corrected, California, as well as many other States, could face economic ruin.

The California Chamber of Commerce, for example, indicated that if this Federal plan is implemented it would result in the loss of a half-million jobs and $50 billion a year in transportation and related costs alone. Small businesses would be especially hard-hit. I do not believe that any one of you, my fellow colleagues, could stand by and watch this happen to your State.

Therefore, I call on my colleagues today, to join me in putting an end to this devastating, or potentially devastating, precedent which will place jobs and economic stability at risk.

FAILURE TO PASS CRIME BILL RULE A CRIME

(Mr. MORAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MORAN. Mr. Speaker, what happened to the crime bill yesterday was a crime. It is a crime that the National Rifle Association is able to determine the votes of the House of Representatives through their PAC's and through their political intimidation. But it would be a worse crime if the American people do not understand why this bill, this rule, was defeated yesterday.

It was not the spin that has been put on it by the other side, and even by some people on the Democratic side, that it was because it contained too much pork. That is nonsense.

The big increase in the conference report over the House bill that many of them voted for was for cops on the beat; $3.4 billion was included for cops on the beat in the House bill; $8.8 billion was included in the conference agreement, a doubling.

This business about hearing the midnight sports leagues, the midnight basketball that Rush Limbaugh and so many people talked about, was actually cut from the House bill to the conference bill that we voted on yesterday, from $50 to $40 million. The big increase, and all the social programs you did not hear about, he big increase was in grants to combat violence against women. That is where the money was. But we do not hear about that.

What happened yesterday was a crime. It should never be repeated again. It is up to the Members of this House to stand up next week and repeal that action.

PORKLESS CRIME BILL WILL GO THROUGH LIKE GREASED LIGHTNING

(Mr. DORNAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DORNAN. Mr. Speaker, all this talk about the hard-hearted Republican leadership is so much nonsense. Do you know how it pains us to see that dyspeptic look on the face of Mr. MORAN and the Speaker? To see the President in high dudgeon? To see the gentlewoman from Colorado coming here verklempt? Mr. SCHUMER talked about the weapon of choice being the phone. Maybe he can call 844-4444, had have coffee talk about what a tragedy it was for the President that his crime bill went down. But under this bill if you dial 911 you are likely to get a social worker instead of a cop.

I would say that my colleagues on the other side of the aisle should spend as much time focusing on how to get tough on criminals as they are trying to get tough with conservative religious people, those that they call the "radical religious right."

There was a meeting yesterday, and I think Mr. MORAN was there, where the Democratic participants arranged for nine Capitol Hill policemen to guard the meeting of the Radical Right Task Force. Mr. FAZIO, Ms. SLAUGHTER, Mr. DURBIN, Mr. FARR of California, Ms. MCKINNEY, Mr. SWETT, Mr. SYNAR, Ms. PRYCE of Ohio, and, yes, JIM MORAN, were all there meeting to do something about "these Christians."

Let us do something about criminals instead. Strip out the pork, bring the bill back, and, Mr. Speaker, it will go through like greased lightning.

DEMOCRAT CRIME BILL MAKES NATION AS SAFE AS NEW YORK CITY

(Mr. HUNTER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Speaker, the American people spoke last night. Congressmen do what their constituents want when they are 3 months out from an election, and that is what happened in the House of Representatives last night.

You know, the gentleman from New York [Mr. SCHUMER] offered us a crime bill that was intended to make our districts, our constituents, our voters, as safe as his district in New York City. And that was the problem.

Let me just say that six victims-right groups contacted us in the Republican Research Committee, the presidents of these groups, Justice for murder Victims, Victims and Friends United, Advocates for Survivors of Violent Crime, Citizens for Law and Order, Organized Victims of Violent Crime, and League of Victims and Empathy. From across the Nation they contacted us, and their presidents came down against this crime bill.

Let me tell you why. They were against it because they said it does not repeal prison caps, it does not include habeas corpus reform, and it does not provide for training for judges and prosecutors on victims rights. It contains no real truth-in-sentencing provisions. It eliminates provisions requiring mandatory restitution to victims of violent crimes.

The people know what was in this bill. They did not want it. They do not want their districts to be as safe as Mr. SCHUMER's district in New York City.

REPUBLICANS WANT A CRIME BILL

(Mr. MICA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MICA. Mr. Speaker, President Clinton last night tried to blame the defeat of the rule on the crime bill on the Republicans and the NRA. My colleagues, he still does not get the message. Republicans and Americans want a crime bill. In fact, 58 Democrats, 25 percent of the majority party who voted no, want a crime bill.

But here is what we and the American people did not want. we have been robbed in the streets, we have been robbed in our homes, and now we do not want to be ripped off by this Congress. We want punishment, not sensitivity training. We want reform of the welfare system that spawned this mess, not more social programs. We wanted our hard-earned dollars to go for good education and job creation, not dance classes and midnight basketball. We want drug felons behind bars, not out on our streets. Finally, Mr. Speaker, we want the death penalty, not President Clinton's promise to abolish it by Executive order.

RIGHTS AND HEALTH OF SEXUAL OFFENSE VICTIMS MUST BE PROTECTED IN NEW CRIME BILL

(Mr. ALLARD asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ALLARD. Mr. Speaker, in the Crime Control Act of 1990, a provision said if States were to receive any funds from the Byrne grant then the State would have to establish a program allowing the victim of sexual assault to have the offender tested for the HIV virus.

I support the 1990 law because we need to protect the health and the rights of the victim, especially in the case of a sexual offense. When someone is raped, the victim has the right to know if their attacker carries this deadly disease.

However, even though the Federal Government requires a program for HIV testing for States, this provision was left out of the Federal crime bill. But now that we have the opportunity to strengthen the bill, I urge my colleagues to include this testing provision. A sex crime is just as heinous whether it is State or Federal and should be treated the same. I believe if this is a State requirement it should also be a Federal requirement.

Without this provision, Congress is telling America that the rights of the victim of a sexual crime is less important than their sexual predator. We should protect the victims of crime and include the Senate provision and insist that Federal crimes be treated as harsh as State crimes. More importantly, the rights of the victim of a sexual crime must be put above the rights of the sexual predator.

THE CRIME BILL VOTE

(Mr. MCCOLLUM asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MCCOLLUM. Mr. Speaker, I have heard a number of people out here today say to us that somehow the vote yesterday was to kill the crime bill. It was not. It was a vote on the rule. It was vote down on the rule.

Republicans voted against the rule, most of us at least, because we believe that there is way too much social welfare spending in this bill. It is a backdoor way that some folks on the other side of the aisle have found to try to get more great society programs into legislation in the law.

There is a simple way to solve the problem that we face now and have a truly bipartisan crime bill all of us want. There is no reason why we should be concerned about doing that. It would take a few hours to sit down and do it. If some reasonable people on both sides of the aisle were called together, I am a conferee, was a conferee, would like to go back and do it again, take $5 billion or $6 billion out of this $9 billion of pork and social welfare spending that is in this bill and put it over into the prison side where it should be. Add to the prison money that is there so that we get enough money in the prison grant programs that we can actually do what we have been told is necessary to have $10.5 billion to $12 billion in order to provide enough money to the States to build the prisons beds necessary to take the repeat, second-time violent offenders off the streets and throw away the key.

That is what we need to be doing for prevention. That is the true crime prevention.

WHY THE RULE WAS DEFEATED

(Mr. WALKER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I agree with the gentleman from Florida that what needs to happen here is the crime bill needs to go back to conference and we need to get out a crime bill that the majority of the House can support, that is a tough bill on crime.

I was a little concerned to hear the President of the United States suggest that what happened on the floor yesterday was a procedural trick. This was not a procedural trick. The only procedural trick was being done by the Democrats in bringing it out in a rule in the first place.

The fact is they could have brought the whole conference report to the floor without ever going to the Committee on rules. The reason why they knew they could not do that is because there were things in the conference report that were subject to points of order on the House floor that would have immediately sent the bill back to conference.

The entire conference report was flawed because of the procedural tricks that went on within the conference. What they were trying to do was cover their tails with what went on in the Committee on Rules, and they cold not get it done on the House floor.

The President needs to be informed that what was happening here was that his own party voted unanimously in the Committee on Rules to try to cover up the procedural tricks that were done in the conference. We should have less of that. Let us bring bills to the floor that are clean so that we can all vote on them clean.

YESTERDAY'S VOTE

(Mr. STEARNS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. STEARNS. Mr. Speaker, the reason that the rule did not pass is because almost 60 Democrats voted with Republicans, majority of Republicans. Now, when we heard the President indicate that the reason the bill did not pass was because of the NRA and Republican leadership, that was not quite right.

The problem is that bill had too much social spending and not enough real crime efforts to decrease the amount of criminals on the street. Time and time again, Republicans have worked with the Democrats to help. For example, NAFTA, NAFTA passed because of a coalition. There right now is in Congress a coalition on a health care bill; that is, the Bilirakis-Rowland bill. We should be beginning as a group to get behind that bill and also GATT is another agreement that the Republicans are working with Democrats. So the Republicans are working with Democrats.

The reason this bill did not pass is not because of the NRA. It is not because of Republican leadership. It is because the American people did not want what that bill had.

FULL BUDGET DISCLOSURE ACT OF 1994

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MONTGOMERY). Pursuant to House Resolution 512 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill, H.R. 4907.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly, the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 4907) to reform the concept of baseline budgeting, with Mrs. SCHROEDER in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the bill is considered read the first time.

The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DERRICK] will be recognized for 15 minutes; the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GOSS] will be recognized for 15 minutes; the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. SPRATT] will be recognized for 15 minutes; and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLINGER] will be recognized for 15 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DERRICK].

Mr. DERRICK. Madam Chairman, I yield myself 5 minutes.

I am delighted to day to bring to the floor H.R. 4906, the Full Budget Disclosure Act of 1994.

This will improve our budget process precisely as its short title suggests: by requiring full budget disclosure. The official title of H.R. 4907 is "a bill to reform the concept of baseline budgeting." I can assure the Members the bill will do just that.

Madam Chairman, I suspect most Americans finds the Federal budget process difficult to comprehend at best. Part of the problem is our confusing terminology; we just don't use the same budgetary terms and concepts that ordinary people do.

One of the concepts associated with Federal budgeting most difficult for ordinary Americans to understand is the notion of a budget baseline.

Under the law, when the President submits his budget to the Congress, and the Congress prepares its congressional budget, they start from something called a "current policy baseline." That baseline assumes for the budget year and subsequent years of continuation of the current spending level for programs and services, adjusted for inflation and certain other technical factors.

There is absolutely nothing wrong with the current policy baseline. After all, every American appreciates how inflation erodes the purchasing power of his dollars over time. All Americans know the same number of dollars won't buy today what they bought 10 years ago, or even last year.

This is why the law provides for cost-of-living adjustments to Social Security benefits. If we did not give cost-of-living adjustments, Social Security benefits would over time lose much of their value and recipients would lose much of their income as inflation eroded their checks' purchasing power.

Madam Chairman, inflation erodes the purchasing power of Federal tax revenues too. Any given number of Federal tax dollars doesn't buy the same quantity of goods and services today that it bought 10 years ago, or even last year. As a result, it takes more dollars to repair a mile of Federal highway, buy fuel for the Navy ships and aircraft, and to maintain government buildings and other assets. Government must deal with the same inflation that households do, and the current policy baseline helps policymakers to understand inflation's effect on programs.

But use of the current policy baseline has one drawback: it makes more difficult comparisons of how spending changes from year to year in actual terms. It is this problem H.R. 4907 is designed to solve.

Under the bill, the President and the Congress would have to include an additional baseline, a current funding baseline, in their budget documents. The current funding baseline would start from last year's spending level and would not be adjusted for inflation.

This additional baseline would allow people to see and understand how various budget proposals would change spending from year to year in constant dollars, without taking inflation into account.

By comparing the two baselines to proposed spending, for example, policymakers and the public could both understand that a budget proposal for a given program might very well represent an increase over last year in actual dollars, but not enough to keep pace with inflation—or effectively a cut in the program.

Or people could see how a proposal that represented an increase in actual dollars exceeded the amount needed to keep pace with inflation, and was effectively an expansion of the program in question.

H.R. 4907 will also require the Congressional Budget Office to include in its annual report to the budget committees a comparison to current spending levels, and an analysis of the causes of increased spending in mandatory programs from cost-of-living adjustments, changes in beneficiaries, higher health-care costs, and other factors. This provision will help us better understand the reasons for growth in those so-called entitlement programs.

I am convinced H.R. 4907 will improve the budget process, that it will result in full budget disclosure, and that it will help both policymaker and ordinary Americans to understand the budget process better. My colleague from South Carolina [Mr. SPRATT] has done excellent work on this legislation. I urge all Members to support the Spratt bill.

Madam Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GOSS. Madam Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Chairman, as I said during the debate on the rule, baseline budgeting is one of our most confusing, irresponsible, inside-the-beltway creations. Under current law, Congress and the President are able to increase the dollars spent on a particular account, while publicly claiming to have cut the budget. The reason for this is that when committee's sit down to decide funding for next year's programs, instead of starting with the actual dollar amount spent the previous year, they use a figure that has been automatically inflated. Both discretionary and entitlement spending are subject to this twisted accounting. As a Member of the Bipartisan Commission on Entitlement Reform, I am hopeful that we will be able to address the dangerous trends in mandatory spending in the near future. But as the ranking member of the Budget Committee, Mr. KASICH, pointed out to us in rules earlier this week, it's far too early to declare victory on the discretionary side of the budget. Comprising an estimated $400 billion in taxpayer funds each year, any excess growth in the discretionary area is a serious concern.

While I am pleased that we have the chance to address the baseline problem today, I am concerned that the Spratt bill, H.R. 4907, will only add to the current confusion. Instead of replacing the single, flawed, baseline we currently use, the Spratt bill will keep that one and add a second baseline consisting of the current year's actual spending. This two-headed monster has two major problems: It is confusing, and it will not be effective in controlling future spending.

The confusion will stem from having two baselines instead of one. While it is difficult to determine when a cut is really a cut now, just wait until the Washington spin doctors are able to have a choice of baselines.

The second problem is the bill's lack of effectiveness. During the markup of the Spratt bill in Rules Committee, I confirmed with the chairman and the bill's sponsor that this bill will not change the current law baseline. Let me repeat; under this bill, the legal baseline will remain unchanged.

An alternative to the confusion and ineffectiveness of H.R. 4907 is the Kasich-Penny-Stenholm substitute. This simple and responsible alternative calls for a single baseline consisting of the current year's actual spending level. In addition, it requires that committee reports include a comparison between current year spending and revenue levels with the proposed increase or decrease in percentage terms. Finally, the substitute provides for a comprehensive review of entitlement spending trends on a yearly basis from the Congressional Budget Office.

Madam Chairman, I agree that it is high time that we reform the inflationary budget baseline. The choice before us should be clear: Support the common-cents amendment, and reject the convoluted approach of the Spratt bill.

Madam Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SPRATT. Madam Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Chairman, the bill before us, H.R. 4907, is very basic. It requires two baselines to be set up in the format of the budget. One is a current funding baseline. This represents actual funding in a given year, the current year, for a functional program in the budget. CBO calls this a freeze.

We had an agreement on the floor yesterday that with respect to the current funding baseline, as defined in our bill, H.R. 4907, and in the substitute, there is no difference, no distinction. They are the same. This bill provides for a current funding baseline, just as Penny-Kasich-Stenholm would.

We also, however, provide for another baseline, which is a baseline used all the time in this institution, and used of necessity. It is called a current policy baseline, commonly sometimes called a current services level of funding—what it takes to carry forward existing programs that are embedded in permanent law, paying the same level of benefits after inflation, serving the same beneficiary population according to the terms of eligibility that are on the statute books, a current policy baseline.

Madam Chairman, our opposition says what they want is one giant scorecard. I would invite everybody who has an opportunity to read the "Minority Views" on this bill that are printed in the committee report, because the "Minority Views" recognize that in fact there are several different baselines used, and they will continue to be used because they are practical, they are good analytical devices, and they are the things that have been used for years and will continue to be used for these reasons.

For example, Madam Chairman, the minority acknowledges that baselines used by the Committee on Appropriations are always actual funding, unadjusted, and if you look at the Committee on Appropriations reports, each of the 13 reports will provide you with this year's funding and next year's funding, and will tell you what has been increased or decreased. That is a baseline that we do not provide for, because it is already used. We are not enshrining it in this particular bill, but it is another baseline.

The opposition derides us for attempting to set up a second baseline and claims that this is double-speak, that we are going to confuse the American people.

In truth, as they well know—as everyone well knows who has dealt with the budget here—the current services or current policy baseline exists because it is a useful device for measuring the adequacy of the current budget. For that reason, we have it. For that reason, it will continue, regardless of the outcome of this legislation.

In fact, Madam Chairman, one of the best defenses of the current policy or current services baseline is made in the minority report. This particular report says that when you are dealing with reconciliation, and I am reading from the report now:

> Where baselines really make a difference is mandatory spending and revenues, since these are used when it comes to reconciliation instructions. These instructions tell committees to find so much in "savings" or revenues by changing existing direct spending or tax laws. The amount of "savings" or revenues are derived by using the baseline of projected costs or revenues for the budget year and the outyears that would occur with no change in current law.

They go on to give an example of how a mandatory program at $100 million would increase to $150 million, but in reconciliation, instructions would be stated to require a $25 million reduction. They acknowledge that this is useful, this is useful. It is necessary, because permanent laws would provide for these programs to increase, unless we take action and do something about them. So we have to know. We have to have some measure of how they are going to increase in order to take action and to decrease them.

Madam Chairman, this is what the minority says:

> No one should deny Congress credit for taking action to restrain the growth in spending for programs, since these are often difficult choices to make.

Not cuts, but restraints in growth:

> On the other hand, it is difficult to convince the public that we are reducing spending and deficits when they see both continue to climb.

So what they want to get at is public perception, but you acknowledge that for purposes of operating this place, we need a current services baseline. They make the case for it right here.

That is all we are saying. Give the public the same baseline that the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PENNY], the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KASICH], and the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM] would require. We are willing to do that, the same definition, but at the same time let us use internally what they make the case for in their own minority views, the current services baseline.

In fact, the gentleman makes the case here. When we do that, the current services baseline is going to continue to exist, as I have argued continually, because it is such a useful device; it is a necessary device in making reconciliation devices.

You admit in here the Committee on Appropriations is still going to use a very simple and basic technique of taking this year's funding and you will also have an adjusted current funding baseline. There are going to be three baselines, regardless of what this bill does. So in formating the budget, let us have two useful baselines, the current funding baseline and the current policy baseline, and let us not try to have some artificial construct that would overcome what is inevitably going to be the operating procedure in this institution.

Mr. GOSS. Madam Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRATT. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. GOSS. I asked the gentleman to yield as a courtesy because he did read from the minority report. We agree we have to have someplace to start from. All we are asking is it be the real starting place with the real numbers and there just be one starting place, not two. I think that is going to be crystal clear to people, that this is what we spent and this is what we are going to spend this year. That is all we are asking.

Mr. MURTHA. Madam Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRATT. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. MURTHA. Let me address what the gentleman is talking about, because we have the biggest discretionary budget in defense. One of the problems we have when they send a budget over to us: Say in the 1980's they would exaggerate inflation and we would have a different figure right away. But if we do not put the inflation figures in, if we do not come up with figures that are realistic, it makes it impossible for us to make the adjustments necessary to come up with a realistic bill.

For instance, the bill has decreased by 35 percent in budget authority and 23 percent in outlays since 1984, about a 10-year period. This year they did not put cost of living in. Last year they did not put cost-of-living in for personnel. Personnel costs are $70 billion for defense. I said, last year, we were going to pay the troops more. Even though nobody else is going to get a cost-of-living increase, the troops are going to get more. That did not sound like a lot of money. It was $11 billion if we count the tail. So if we do not consider inflation in the overall presentation, we have got a real problem. In other words, the first thing we would have to do is exactly what they have done when they have sent their presentation over to us. That is the problem.

Mr. SABO. Madam Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRATT. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. SABO. One of the purposes of baseline is to have some understanding of historically what is happening with programs in the relative level of funding. If I understand the gentleman accurately, when one looks at defense in budget authority from its peak in 1985, in inflation adjusted dollars, budget authority has gone down 35 percent. As I understand it, our friends who want to amend this bill would say it had only gone down about 10 percent, because that is what the change in dollars without any inflation adjustments would be, which most accurately historically reflects what has changed in defense spending over the last 9 or 10 years.

Mr. MURTHA. When we are talking about the bill, we are sitting in subcommittee, and it takes the staff weeks to get the budget proposals together that are sent over to us. The gentleman from Minnesota is on the committee and he knows what I am talking about. We try to at first figure out what the accurate figures are. I know that what the gentleman is trying to do is come up with accurate figures in the baseline, but if you do not have inflation built in, it is impossible for us to get the amount of money we need out of the budget. We do not have any leeway at all is what it amounts to. We always evaluate their inflation figures. Sometimes we reduce what they consider the inflationary costs and sometimes we do not. But we believe that in real dollars when we look at it, it has only declined 10 percent, but if we include inflation, it has declined by 35 percent. So we can see that we are not getting a realistic picture. It would be impossible for us to operate. The first thing we would have to do is put in the inflation figures. I do not see how we could operate under the premise that the gentleman from Texas is recommending. At least I do not see how it happens in a bill that we try to handle. So I have to agree with the Spratt idea.

Mr. STENHOLM. Madam Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRATT. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. STENHOLM. The argument we make, nothing in our amendment precludes this discussion and these numbers and these concerns that the gentleman is expressing. All we are saying is we should start from one baseline and if we need to have increases for the valid reasons the gentleman from Pennsylvania is talking about, we justify those reasons, but we compare it back to one baseline. There is not a big difference between that. There is a big difference between the confusing aspects, though, if we are suggesting the second baseline is a valid baseline of which we have the money to pay for it. That is the problem. We are running $200 billion deficits, we have a cap on discretionary spending that we have to move to. So any increases have to be justified. We think it makes more sense for us to justify them on one baseline, and if we have an increase, call it what it is so people will understand we are getting an increase for the purpose of what we are increasing it.

Mr. SPRATT. Madam Chairman, if I could reclaim my time, we would agree with that to an extent. We will give the public and the Congress that information, but we will also retain the essential common sense of having a current services baseline because as the minority report correctly observes, it is absolutely necessary when we are determining whether or not what entitlement programs in particular are going to cost and to what extent spending growth must be restrained in these programs. Without that baseline, we have got no reliable estimate of what 70 percent of the budget direct spending is going to be in the outyears.

Mr. SABO. Madam Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRATT. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. SABO. If I might direct another question to my friend, the gentleman from Pennsylvania who chairs the Subcommittee on Defense. When you put out a committee report for your bill this year, if I remember accurately, it shows what was appropriated for last year's bill and it shows what is appropriated for next year's bill. Is that not accurate?

Mr. MURTHA. And also we usually have a 5-year projection in our bill if we ever are able to get it from the Defense Department. I understand what the gentleman is trying to do and I understand the problem. But if we do not build inflation in, the first thing we would do is to put the inflationary figures in the bill. Otherwise I am not sure how you operate.

Mr. SPRATT. I thank the gentleman for his statement.

Madam Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. CLINGER. Madam Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Chairman, I would rise in reluctant opposition to H.R. 4907 and in support of the Penny-Kasich-Stenholm substitute. Before I do so, I would like to express again my concern and disappointment that the Committee on Government Operations which has jurisdiction over this matter waived our jurisdiction and did not consider this measure or this issue. I think the discussion that has just gone on about what some would view as an arcane, esoteric subject indicates that it is a complex area that really should be fully considered through the committee process. I would, therefore, register again my dismay that the Democratic leadership chose to have the Committee on Government Operations waive its jurisdiction.

I would like to commend the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. SPRATT] for his work in crafting the budget bills that we have considered over the past several weeks, even though we did not consider them in committee, and to recognize the great service he has provided this body in bringing these bills to the floor. The task he has been given in drafting meaningful budget reform legislation, which at the same time satisfies the desires of spending advocates is not a job that I would covet. Frankly it is not a job that I am sure I would accept. Nevertheless, I believe that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. SPRATT] has very honestly tried to resolve the conflicting and sometimes very confusing signals that he has received on baseline budgeting, which has become, as I say again, readily apparent this morning.

Unfortunately confusing signals can occasionally lead to confusing legislation and that I suspect is the essence of H.R. 4907.

H.R. 4907 would establish, as we have heard, two separate statutorily equal baselines for discretionary spending, one which includes inflation adjustments, and one without.

Because the bill creates both a current policy baseline which adjusts for inflation and a current funding baseline which reflects current year's spending without an inflation adjustment, future budget and spending debates would likely be even less clear under the Spratt bill than is now the case.

□ 1120

While one group of Members might well be discussing an inflation-adjusted baseline, a second could readily be referring to the equally sanctioned unadjusted spending baseline, and the result, I think would be Members talking at cross-purposes, ships passing in the night, and a public unable to understand how program spending is rising or falling.

The Spratt bill would defeat the very purpose of baseline reform, that is, to provide a clear, ambiguous picture of spending growth.

While the very same information would be available under the Penny-Kasich-Stenholm approach, their amendment would establish one single baseline to reflect current spending, and any adjustments to the program funding would be revealed through a single, unadjusted baseline to provide a clear comparison of current and future spending. In addition, the Kasich approach would provide comparisons on entitlement spending which is not required, if I understand it, under H.R. 4907.

So, Madam Chairman, because the Penny-Kasich-Stenholm amendment provides the only real opportunity for clear, honest, and understandable budget debates while at the same time assuring access to information on programs, trends, and inflation needs, I would urge the adoption of the amendment.

Madam Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. DERRICK. Madam Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM].

Mr. STENHOLM. Madam Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

Madam Chairman, I again want to try to make this basic point from our perspective: We would like to see one baseline, and that when we consider appropriation bills that we are comparing what we are being asked to spend in the future with what we spent last year. All of the relevance of baseline or current services or inflation-adjusted figures can still be made, just as the gentleman from Pennsylvania made a moment ago very relevant opinions that in some cases, if you do not keep up with inflation, there are certain cuts that are going to have to occur. But those should not be conceived from the standpoint if inflation goes up 103 and we grant 102 that we have cut somebody 1 percent. It should be that we ought to be debating that we are increasing.

I do not understand when this country and so many of the people particularly in this body came to the conclusion that cost-of-living adjustments, inflation-guaranteed increases, are an inherited right of anybody. No business can grant increases based on inflation unless they are making a profit.

We are losing $200 billion-plus a year right now in the United States of America, Inc. How anyone believes that they have a right to an inflation-adjusted figure for any purpose beats me.

But we think that it will, in fact, be more relevant, and we will get more honest debate and get more honest conclusions if we start right here in this body saying to everyone, "Here is what you got last year, here is what we are giving this year." If it is an increase, "This is why we are increasing it," and if it is a cut, "This Is why we are cutting it." If you want to make the argument that we have to make inflation-increased adjustments, make that argument, but make certain that in fact you explain why that increase goes up. That is all this argument is about.

That is why I encourage you to vote for the Penny-Kasich-Stenholm amendment. Vote against the Spratt amendment, because that is the only way we are truly going to get this explained in a way in which the average American can understand it.

Madam Chairman, there are some who will say that the debate on baseline budgeting is a meaningless exercise. I disagree. The way that we talk about the choices we face in the Federal budget has a significant impact on the outcome of policy. This debate is about bringing some honesty into the way that we talk about budgets.

The current budget process is enormously confusing and strongly biased in favor of deficit spending. Baseline budgeting distorts the process by making it appear that programs are incurring a spending cut when in fact they simply are receiving a smaller increase that expected.

The base bill before us today improves the current process by ensuring that Members will be able to compare proposed spending levels with the previous year's spending levels. The base bill has taken many of the provisions of the Common Cents Budget Reform Act that I introduced along with TIM PENNY and JOHN KASICH. Unfortunately, the base bill will create additional confusion in the budget process by adding a second official baseline. The base bill will make it even more difficult for the public to understand the budget process around here. More importantly, the base bill will continue the current bias toward higher spending created by the current services budgeting.

The Penny-Kasich-Stenholm amendment will eliminate the bias toward higher spending that is included in the base bill by replacing the current services baseline with a freeze baseline. Our amendment would put some west Texas tractor seat common sense in the budget process by requiring that budget proposals compare their budgets to the amount actually spent the prior year rather than against estimates of future spending. We should recognize increases in spending for what they are and not talk about cutting spending for what they are and not talk about cutting spending when we really are voting to increase spending.

The folks at the Stamford Dairy Queen understand that if you received $100 last year and receive $99 this year, that is a spending cut. If you receive $101 this year, that is an increase, even if you thought you were going to get $102 this year. The small business men and women of this country understand that if you are operating in the red, you can't afford to give cost-of-living adjustments to everyone.

The Penny-Kasich-Stenholm amendment will improve the decisionmaking process by changing the way we talk about budget decisions. If you want to put some truth in budgeting, vote for the Penny-Kasich-Stenholm substitute and against the Spratt substitute.

Mr. GOSS. Madam Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from Delaware [Mr. CASTLE].

Mr. CASTLE. Madam Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me this time.

The gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM], I think, spoke as eloquently to the issues that I would like to speak to as anybody possibly could.

I watched this debate, and I have listened to it, and certainly everybody who has spoken, particularly those who have defended the baseline budgeting as it exists, are great contributors to this Congress and are leaders in this Congress, and I respect that. I respect all that they have done. I do not mean to disagree with this particular bill as it is drafted, although I think the amendment, which is the Penny-Stenholm-Kasich amendment, is a far greater improvement to it.

But the bottom line is I do not think the public really comprehends what we are doing in the Congress of the United States with the budget, and as I sit here longer and longer, month by month, I begin to realize more and more why we have the budget deficit we do. Thank God this year we have started to at least deal with, if not pass, the issues of the line-item veto, with the enhanced rescissions which later passed, the balanced-budget amendment, and now we are dealing with baseline budgeting. Maybe later today we are dealing with emergency spending reforms which I think are needed. But the bottom line is, I think, one of the great problems we have is with baseline budgeting.

When you have a budget which actually begins each year with inflation built in, with demographic changes built in, with program costs built in, you have admitted defeat. You are never going to be able to balance your budget.

Mr. SABO. Madam Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CASTLE. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. SABO. Where is this budget that starts from this mythical baseline as you call it, every year?

Mr. CASTLE. Where is the budget?

Mr. SABO. Yes. I am curious. I have been budget chair 2 years. I put a chairman's mark in front of the committee for 2 years. I have never started with my mark to the committee being a baseline. A baseline is a measurement. It is not a budget.

Mr. CASTLE. Reclaiming my time, but it is used constantly by Members of Congress, not you necessarily, but by Members of Congress, by the White House of both parties, to say they are going to have savings on the budget.

Mr. SABO. Sure. It is a measurement.

Mr. CASTLE. It is an increased baseline.

Mr. SABO. It is a measurement of what is happening, just as last year's is a measurement.

Mr. CASTLE. It is a failure, it is a failure. I reclaim my time. It is a failure to recognize the fact of having a dollar amount in the year before, and you are actually spending more because you are starting with a new baseline which is artificial.

Mr. SABO. I would ask the gentleman to go to this year's budget resolution and find any number that refers to baseline in the budget document.

Mr. CASTLE. Whether it is referred to baseline in the document or not is irrelevant, because it is constantly referred to as baseline by everybody here with the understanding that all of this is put in.

Mr. SABO. This is a historic measurement of what we are doing, and that is accurate.

Mr. CASTLE. What I am simply asking for is the fact we start in all of our reporting with the figures from the year before, and that if we want to add in these figures, we show how they are being added. Maybe you do it in your budget process, but it does not come out that way in the public process.

Mr. SABO. We show last year's number, and we show this year's number. That is in the budget now, sir.

Mr. CASTLE. I have enjoyed this discussion with the chairman, but the bottom line is, in Washington, DC, we are still presenting the budget where the inflation is automatically built in.

I agree with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM], why should we have an inflation-adjusted budget presented to us as if it is a given right. I think the time has come we start looking at the flat amount that was spent the year before. Should we reduce it or increase it for whatever the reasons may be? Come to those conclusions and budget in that manner. If we do that, I believe that you are going to see budgets in this Congress which are going to more approximate what they should be in terms of the expenditures of the United States of America getting closer to a balanced budget and ultimately dealing with the deficit problems of the United States of America.

I was just handed a document which shows baseline budgeting in the budget document which the chairman just spoke to, so perhaps he does not understand his own document.

Mr. DERRICK. Madam Chairman, I yield 2½ minutes to the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. KENNELLY].

Mrs. KENNELLY. Madam Chairman, I believe the baseline proposal of the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. SPRATT] is clearly the best and fairest alternative before us, and I urge all Members to support it.

The argument here is over baselines, and, specifically, about what baseline gives us the best information for making spending decisions. A baseline is one of those Washington terms, but there is nothing arcane about the concept. A baseline is a method of comparison. Our current baseline tells us how much we will need to spend to purchase the same amount of goods and services as last year. It is a dynamic measure—not a static one, because it increases or decreases with inflation and deflation, with population growth or population loss.

I happen to believe the current baseline is the most useful one, because if the Federal Government is going to provide fewer services to my constituents, I want to know about it. I do not want to tell my constituents not to worry because we are spending the same amount as last year—when because of inflation, we are actually cutting services by 3- or 5-percent.

The authors of the alternative amendment are more interested, I believe, in knowing how much spending increases in nominal dollars. I completely agree that that is a useful thing to know, and if that is what they want to talk to their constituents about, I will not quarrel.

But why not do both? Why not look at spending from both perspectives, as Mr. SPRATT suggests? I do not think that understanding both sides of the equation will lead to more confusion; I believe it will enlighten us as to what is really going on in the budget. And I believe that would be worthwhile.

I urge my colleagues to vote against the Penny/Stenholm proposal, and for the Spratt proposal.

Mr. CLINGER. Madam Chairman, I would like to now yield 3 minutes to a valued member of the Committee on Government Operations, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. MICA].

Mr. MICA. Madam Chairman and my colleagues, as a new Member of this body coming recently from the private business sector, I have become accustomed to viewing the legislative process with a certain amount of healthy cynicism. I expect the Congress to do little yet claim a lot; to achieve modestly and trumpet loudly; to spend extravagantly and to save occasionally. I even expect us to do it with winks and nods and vague debates designed to obscure the reality of our true actions.

Even with this perspective, I am a little surprised by H.R. 4907. This bill, which comes to us as part of the leadership's A-to-Z sellout deal has no other purpose really other than to confuse future budget and spending debates, in my opinion.

While billed as an effort to provide more-informed budget discussions through baseline reform, H.R. 4907 would in fact simply cloud those debates through the introduction of two statutorily equal yet contrary budget baselines. H.R. 4907 would create both a current policy baseline and a current funding baseline, the first, which adjusts for inflation, and the second, which does not.

If passed, H.R. 4907 would encourage spending debates where groups of Members, in discussing the same $300 million program cut, could by using different baselines lines be hailing a major spending reduction on the one hand while decrying a budget-busting on the other.

If confusing to Members, just imagine the reaction of our constituents, the public, to this hocus-pocus and the resulting erosion in public trust.

By way of contrast to H.R. 4907, the Penny-Kasich-Stenholm substitute would create one single budget baseline to show this year's spending level pure and simple, no inflation adjustments, no gadgets, no gimmicks. If spending went up, we would call it an increase; if spending went down, we would know it is a cut. To me that makes sense.

Because the Penny-Kasich-Stenholm substitute provides the House its only real true opportunity to vote for real baseline budgeting reform in this Congress, I support the amendment's adoption and urge defeat of the Spratt alternatives.

Finally, Madam Chairman and my colleagues, you can fool some of the Members some of the time, but we do not need a two-baseline budget approach to fool more of the Members and the public all of the time.

Mr. DERRICK. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SABO].

Mr. SABO. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

I would suggest to the last gentleman who spoke, he should read an Appropriations Committee report one year. He would find the numbers there.

Last year, the President's request, committee recommendations, minus and plus from last year, from the President's request.

But I rise in support of the Spratt bill. There are three, and probably more, ways to accurately measure what we are doing as we deal with fiscal questions. One is last year's comparison to this year, that is accurate. We should know that.

We also need to know what historically is happening with programs. As it relates to discretionary programs, we need to know its impact, the impact of what we are doing in relationship to inflation. The reality is from 1985 inflation-adjusted dollars, defense has been cut 35 percent rather than simply 10 percent from the actual BA authority of 1985. That accurately reflects history and should be part of our documents.

Another measurement which we often use for larger programs is their relationship to gross domestic product. We show those regularly as a percentage of the gross domestic product. Again an accurate reflection of history.

What Mr. SPRATT's bill does is say that we can use all of those judgments and that they are accurate.

I must say to my friends who are proposing an alternative today, they would in fact skew any look at discretionary programs from the point of view of a program adjusted by inflation versus entitlements where inflation is built into the program, where inflation remains a part of the baseline.

If anything, the proposal skews our discussion more and more away from discretionary and more and more to entitlement programs.

Mr. GOSS. Madam Chairman, at this time I yield 2½ minutes to the distinguished chief budgeteer on our side, the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KASICH].

Mr. KASICH. I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Madam Chairman, a picture truly is worth a thousand words. This chart here—and we will bring this back during the debate on the amendment—represents the National Science Foundation's spending. What essentially happened is that we increased the National Science Foundation by $221 million over 5 years. Yet the increase of $221 million over 5 years—you can see how it goes up each year. This is the National Science Foundation over 5 years. You can see clearly it is growing.

Any American family would feel good if their wages were growing like this. But in Washington terms, when you are living in Peoria or Columbus or in Waseca, Minnesota, you do not get told that the National Science Foundation is increasing like this. You read in the newspaper that the National Science Foundation was subject to a $476 million cut.

Now, come on, folks; that is not the way we want to budget in this town.

This increase, under no set of circumstances, under any set of explanations whatsoever, this cannot be called a cut. One place, one place, Disney World would be the only place that this could be labeled a cut or maybe some scam game out in Las Vegas.

This is an increase.

What we are suggesting in the Penny-Kasich-Stenholm amendment is that we call this an increase. Is it true that from one year to the next year that costs go up? Well, of course they do. But some costs go down. And in addition to that, you have to begin to prioritize.

We are not prejudging, we are not prejudging whether spending ought to go up or whether it ought to go down. What we are suggesting is that the American people be told that this is a spending increase. We are suggesting that the American people no longer be told that this is a spending cut.

Now, how can we afford to talk in terms that we can all understand in this country when we are going to have to deal with the immense problem of the budget deficit; not the budget deficit itself but the size and the scope of the Government and implications of the size and the scope of the Government beginning to suck resources out of the private sector, damaging the ability of this country to be prosperous in the outyears.

If I have to talk to anybody in this gallery today, and I have to tell them we need to reduce spending, I certainly want to be talking to them in language they understand. This is an increase in anybody's definition, not a cut.

Mr. DERRICK. Madam Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OBEY].

Mr. OBEY. Madam Chairman, as my colleagues know, I get awfully tired of cynics in this House, and I also get awfully tired of the things people know that ain't so.

I say to my colleagues, What you really have going here is a competition between biases. You got one set of folks who would like to see the budget always biased in favor of additional spending, you got another set of folks who would like to see it biased against spending, and in my view it should not be biased at all. That is the difference between the Stenholm and Spratt amendments. STENHOLM simply says, regardless of what happens in real life, the measure you start from when we take a look at a budget is what last year's dollar numbers were period. SPRATT says, because we might like to know what the impact is on Social Security recipients, because we might like to know what the impact is on our national defense and other key endeavors, he simply says to look at both ways, one from an unadjusted base, another from an adjusted base.

Now in light of the misstatements that have been made on the floor, Madam Chairman, I have here copies of 6 of the 13 Committee on Appropriations reports. We issue a report for every appropriation bill each year. My colleagues will not find in a one of them, not a one of them, numbers that are based on an inflated budget baseline. We start in all instances with the amount appropriated in the previous year. Then we list what is being appropriated in the coming year, and we compare it, either up or down, on the basis of a nonadjusted baseline.

So, do not give me this baloney that we spend more money because we start with the wrong baseline. We do not. We use the unadjusted base line.

All the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. SPRATT] is suggesting is that, when we are looking at defense, it would be kind of nice to know if whether over 5 years or not the purchasing power of our programs have reduced by 30 percent or not because, if we get in a shooting war, it would be kind of nice if we had a whole submarine rather than two-thirds of a submarine. It would be kind of nice to know that we had the same effective combat power, even after inflation has eaten into it, that we had 10 years ago.

Now that is not used for budgeting purposes. I say, you do not build that money into the budget, but you have it available so people understand what the real-world effect is.

AARP has written us a letter in support of the Spratt amendment and in opposition to the Stenholm-Penny-Kasich amendment because they do not want to see the system biased in a way which will push the pressure to lower Social Security payments, and we should not want to bias it in that way. I say, If you pass the Spratt-Stenholm amendment, you are creating pressure to drive down Social Security payments. I do not think very many people want to do that.

When I bring the foreign aid bill to the floor——

Mr. SPRATT. Madam Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OBEY. I yield to the gentleman from South Carolina.

Mr. SPRATT. It is the Stenholm-Penny-Kasich amendment which I hope the gentleman is speaking against. He said the Spratt——

Mr. OBEY. Madam Chairman, I apologize. I meant Stenholm-Kasich.

Mr. CLINGER. Madam Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McDADE] to engage in a colloquy.

Mr. McDADE. Madam Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLINGER].

I would like to, if I may, get the attention of my able friend, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OBEY], the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

I wanted to just try to clarify one thing, because, for Members, it is quite a busy day here, as we all know.

As I understand what he said was that there are many standards by which budgeteering occurs, but fundamentally, when the Committee on Appropriations begins to do a bill and take testimony, the baseline that we use is last year's level of expenditures. Is that what the gentleman's point was?

Mr. OBEY. Madam Chairman, if the gentleman would yield, that is the baseline which we show in our reports, but we have available to us other devices and, the public should have available those same devices so that they understand what the impact is on program as well as understanding how it relates to specific amount of dollars that we appropriated last year.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McDADE] has expired.

Mr. CLINGER. Madam Chairman, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. McDADE].

Mr. McDADE. Madam Chairman, I thank the gentleman for having yielded an additional minute to me. I have been privileged to be a member of the Committee on Appropriations for 30 years. Let us focus, for example, on the defense budget. Let us assume that we have last year's level and for the first time in this year's budget we are going to buy an aircraft carrier if the Congress says yes. We fully fund the aircraft carrier in the current fiscal year budget; do we not?

Mr. OBEY. That is my understanding.

Mr. McDADE. That is my understanding as well, and we do it in relation to last year's level of expenditures, and we fully fund it so everybody in the Congress will know the out-year costs of that system, whether it be an aircraft carrier, or submarine, or whatever, and we have been doing that as a matter of course, as regular practice, in the Committee on Appropriations during my 30 years, but is that his understanding?

Mr. OBEY. That is exactly right.

Mr. McDADE. I thank the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. OBEY. And we intend to continue to do that, but we want people to have available as an analytical tool both baselines. We do not spend from the inflation-adjusted baseline, but people ought to know what the real-life impact is.

Mr. CLINGER. Madam Chairman, I yield 4 minutes to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. ZELIFF], a member of the Committee on Government Operations.

Mr. KASICH. Madam Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ZELIFF. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KASICH. Madam Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. ZELIFF] yielding.

Let me say that I have in my hand the budget document, and the simple fact of the matter is, if we look at the 5-year spending bill, it actually increases in the budget document, and then the committee changed from the baseline, from the inflated growth level, shows cuts.

This is how we budget.

The simple fact of the matter is we take the baseline increases, exactly what we are trying to prevent in this bill, and we show anything below that level as a cut. So, in this country a cut is an increase. An increase is a cut in these budget documents.

Mr. ZELIFF. OK.

I rise in opposition to H.R. 4907 with all great due respect to my friend, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. SPRATT] and in support of the Penny-Kasich-Stenholm substitute, and I associate my remarks with the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM]. The two-baseline system in this legislation will give us continued confusion, not reform. We need to have a clear bottom line to tell us whether real spending cuts have been made or whether we have simply slowed the growth in spending. The Penny-Kasich-Stenholm approach gives us this much needed businesslike reform.

The Penny-Kasich-Stenholm amendment provides for a true baseline with real numbers, not Mickey Mouse numbers that are so confusing no one knows what they mean.

As a small businessman by trade, let me illustrate this point. An employee goes to his boss and asks for a $1 per hour raise. The employer in turn offers a rise of 50 cents an hour. Under current budget rules, rules that would continue under this legislation, the baseline budget would show this this raise as a 50 cents an hour cut in spending for accounting purposes. Under the Penny-Kasich-Stenholm amendment, the raise would cost 50 cents an hour additional over the previous year's spending. My friends can be the judge. Which process makes the most sense in terms of fiscal accountability?

I am pleased that we are beginning to at least talk about reforming the flawed budget process, but we should not delude ourselves into thinking that we are doing anything more than tinkering at the margins.

Budget process reform is important, but let us not kid ourselves; we would not be here today if it were not for the leadership's determined effort to derail the A to Z spending cut effort.

And what has the leadership offered us in reform? Fundamental reform and real cuts in spending, or more tinkering at the margins?

A bipartisan group of 230 Members who cosponsored our bill and 204 Members who signed the discharge petition are supporting the A to Z plan to bring about real cuts in Federal spending and the elimination of wasteful Government programs.

□ 1150

This effort is desperately needed. We are in debt to the tune of $4.7 trillion, a level that is expected to rise to $6 trillion in the next 5 years. We are paying out $212 billion this year on the interest on the debt. By the year 2002 the interest on the debt will be $272 billion. A recent report by the bipartisan entitlement report commission indicates that by the year 2002 spending for entitlements and interest on the debt will consume all expected Federal revenue, leaving nothing for other programs.

So what has the leadership offered us to deal with the situation? Expedited rescissions authority that does very little, a budget-control bill that does nothing to control entitlement growth, and budget-disclosure legislation that establishes a confusing process of two separate budget guidelines.

Has the leadership followed through on a commitment to give us one day to consider entitlement cuts? No. Is there any serious effort at spending cuts so far? No; we are simply tinkering around the margins.

Madam Chairman, some of the process reforms sound real good, but A to Z remains the best way to curb runaway wasteful spending. If we want real reform, if we want to make a real difference, and if we want to cut wasteful Federal spending and protect future generations from being saddled with our huge debt, then I encourage all the Members to join 204 of our colleagues and sign the A to Z discharge petition No. 16 today. Let us stop playing games. Let us give the American people real reform. It is time for all of us to stop talking the talk and start walking the walk.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would like to announce that the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DERRICK] has 1 minute remaining, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. SPRATT] has 2 minutes remaining, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GOSS] has 3 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLINGER] has 2½ minutes remaining.

Mr. DERRICK. Madam Chairman, I reserve the right to close.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. SPRATT].

Mr. SPRATT. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. PRICE].

Mr. PRICE of North Carolina. Madam Chairman, anyone concerned about responsible budgeting, deficit reduction, and intelligent budget process improvements can confidently support the Spratt baseline budget proposal, and they ought to oppose the Penny-Kasich-Stenholm substitute. That is because the Spratt measure is a balanced measure that would provide more information rather than less and would present that information in an easily understandable form.

We would be able to look at budget proposals both from the standpoint of current funding and from the standpoint of what it would take to maintain current policy. Both of these kinds of information are essential to responsible budgeting. By contrast, the Stenholm-Penny-Kasich proposal would narrow the amount of information used in drafting the budget because it would require Congress only to consider the previous year's nominal spending level. As the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OBEY] and the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. MCDADE] have already made clear, we already use that point of comparison in presenting all of our appropriation bills. But in evaluating spending levels we do need information about what it would take to maintain current levels of coverage of benefits or program activity.

It is silly not to consider inflation or caseload increases. Everyone knows that the value of a dollar changes year to year.

We have heard a lot of analogies drawn in this debate to family budgeting. If you are drawing up your family budget and you are deciding what you need for food, you are going to want to know not just what you spent last year for food but you are also going to want to know what the inflation rate has been and how much it is going to take to feed your family at this year's prices. That is the way a family budget works, and that is the kind of information we need for the Federal budget as well.

There has been a lot of talk about budget numbers being confusing. That is actually rather patronizing, as though we were not able to understand this information or the American people could not handle it.

Talk about confusion: what we have in the Penny proposal is an artificial separation between entitlements and discretionary spending. The gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM] is properly concerned about the entitlement mentality in this country, but then why on earth would he leave entitlements out of this proposal? That invites far more confusion than does our present process.

Madam Chairman, the Spratt proposal would improve and expand the information available to us as we draw up the budget. The Penny-Kasich-Stenholm proposal would limit information and could distort the budget process. Support objective, informed budgeting. Support the Spratt substitute.

Mr. CLINGER. Madam Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. GOSS. Madam Chairman, I understand that I have 3 minutes remaining, and I yield all that time to the distinguished gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PENNY].

Mr. PENNY. Madam Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding this time to me.

Madam Chairman, an earlier speaker remarked that what we are really debating here is a question of spending bias, the bias in the debate. Some want to bias the debate in favor of spending, some want to bias the debate against additional spending. That does get to the heart of the issue.

The reason there is such resistance, unfortunately most of it on my side of the aisle, to the proposition that we ought to have a hard freeze as a baseline is because many Members of Congress prefer to have a spending bias in the way we develop our budgets.

The previous speaker just remarked that a family facing higher food costs has to anticipate those higher food costs and Congress ought to anticipate the higher costs that are attributable to all the programs we run as well. The difference is that if a family faces the same paycheck, they have to eat those higher food costs within the existing budget. Congress does not have to do that. We do not even admit that we have increased the budget unless the increase goes beyond the rate of inflation. Families do not have that luxury.

Our budget process does not make sense to most families in America because it is a nonsensical budget process. We start out with inflated baselines, and anything less than that is a cut, and that is absolute nonsense.

Several speakers have suggested that somehow this is going to put tremendous pressure on popular programs, and that the AARP opposes the Penny-Stenholm-Kasich substitute. The fact is that we treat entitlements in exactly the same manner that the Spratt proposal treats entitlements. There is no difference between the two. That is a real herring.

Some would say that a process change is not going to cure our spending problem here on Capitol Hill, but if process did not matter, then why are people who are happy with the status quo so resistant to this change in our budget process? We need to change the terms of debate in Washington, DC. We still face deficits as far as the eye can see in the $200 billion range per year. We need to change the spending bias.

The Penny-Stenholm-Kasich substitute establishes a hard-freeze baseline that will take away the spending bias. It will not deny the Budget Committee or the appropriators or others from using other comparisons in an inflation-adjusted budget, last year's budget, whatever, they want, but the official baseline against which all measures will be scored in the future would be a hard freeze. It will make our budget decisions more honest.

This debate does come down to that simple question of a bias. Do we want to continue a bias in favor of spending, or do we want to once and for all eliminate that bias? To vote for the Penny-Kasich-Stenholm substitute is to vote for honesty in budgeting.

Mr. CLINGER. Madam Chairman, may I inquire as to how much time remains?

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. CLINGER] has 2½ minutes remaining, and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DERRICK] has 1 minute remaining.

Mr. CLINGER. Madam Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GOSS].

Mr. GOSS. Madam Chairman, I thank the distinguished gentleman from Pennsylvania for yielding this 1 minute to me.

I simply wanted to make a closing remark from our point of view. We have heard from the appropriators and we have heard various views from both sides of the aisle on the budget process. I do not think anybody is trying to suggest that the appropriators are trying to deceive the Members of Congress in the process we go through in the appropriation of discretionary funding.

We do get lots of comparisons. There is no question about that. As Members of Congress, we need to get those, and we need to know what we are talking about. There is no beef on that at all, as far as I can see. The problem here is what the public wants to know and what claims are made. We are simply trying to suggest that there ought to be one clear, simple, understandable way of presenting it, that this is what we spent last year and this is what we are going to spend this year.

Nobody is saying that we should ignore inflation or all of the other factors, the cost of doing business. Nobody is suggesting we should do that. What we are really saying is when we make claims, that they should be accurate and based on the fact that we spent this last year, we are going to spend this this year, and this is why. I do urge support of the Penny-Kasich-Stenholm amendment.

Mr. CLINGER. Madam Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from California [Mr. COX], a member of the committee.

Mr. COX. Let me give just three examples of how baseline budgeting misleads everyone here in Congress and the American people. Republicans and Democrats this year offered amendments to reform the U.S. Marshal's Service. The amendments increased spending on the program by $9 million. You and I would call this a spending increase, but opponents of this commonsense effort at reform called it a $5 million spending cut. This is inside-the-beltway nonsense.

A second proposal would have allowed funding for the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco, and Firearms to grow by $15 million. The congressional budget process could not resist calling this a $2 million cut. More nonsense.

The State Department is a frequent target for reform. Republicans this year proposed restructuring the Department, but allowing its budget to increase by $25 million. Stop, said the big spenders. You are slashing the Department's spending by $77 million. Once again, this is the budget-baseline-beltway-nonsense factor at work.

We are on the right track here. We are on the way to commonsense reform, and I support the Stenholm-Penny-Kasich substitute.

Madam Chairman, Thomas Jefferson once noted, he who permits himself to tell a lie once, finds it much easier to do it a second and third time, until at length it becomes habitual. He tells lies without attending to it and the truth without the world believing him.

Jefferson was right. Baseline budgeting is a lie, one that eats away at our credibility. We should abandon this process forthwith.

Mr. DERRICK. Madam Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Madam Chairman, it is clear people out in the countryside don't understand and appreciate the current policy baseline that we use in the Federal budget. What they understand is comparing proposed changes in funding for Federal programs to last year's level.

The Spratt bill will require budgets to include another baseline comparing spending not only to the current policy baseline, but also to the previous year's level. Both comparisons are relevant and instructive, and in fact necessary to a complete understanding of the budget. I believe the bill will improve the process both for policymakers and the American people.

Doing away with the current policy baseline and substituting the current funding baseline, as the Stenholm-Penny-Kasich amendment would do, will not result in full budget disclosure. It will merely substitute different information for what we use now. All the information is necessary to have full budget disclosure, and I commend the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. SPRATT] for his hard work on this legislation.

I urge all Members to support the Spratt bill and reject the Penny-Kasich-Stenholm substitute.

Mr. FRANKS of Connecticut. Madam Chairman, I would have to say that very few of my constituents know that there are automatic spending increases every year in budget bills. They do not realize that a program spending cut passed by Congress—rare though this is—may not necessarily mean that less money will be spent on this program than the previous year. Yes, there are two definitions of a spending cut in Washington. I define a spending cut as actually reducing spending from the previous year. The majority party in Congress defines it as a legislative reduction from an automatic increase determined by the Congressional Budget Office and the Office of Management and Budget using assumptions of current law, inflation, and economic, and demographic changes.

Supposedly, the Budget Control Act will eliminate this deception. But while this bill has a powerful-sounding name, it does not really do anything to reform the budget process. The Budget Control Act will allow both definitions—my definition and the majority definition—to be used in budgeting. While this is an improvement over the current way spending cuts are portrayed, Congress can do better. I will vote for the Stenholm-Penny-Kasich substitute, which requires that all spending proposals be compared to the prior year's actual enacted levels. Under this substitute, the deceptive way spending cuts are portrayed would be completely eliminated. This can only benefit voters when they evaluate their representative's positions on cutting spending.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PENNY] will be recognized for 15 minutes and a Member opposed will be recognized for 15 minutes. Is the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. SPRATT] opposed?

Mr. SPRATT. Madam Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. SPRATT] will control the 15 minutes in opposition.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PENNY].

Mr. PENNY. Madam Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Chairman, with our colleagues, CHARLIE STENHOLM and JOHN KASICH, I am today offering an amendment to H.R. 4907, the Full Budget Disclosure Act of 1994, that will provide a very simple, but powerful and fundamental change in the budget process.

Here's the problem we face: even though President Clinton's budget cut spending by approximately $250 billion over 5 years, Federal spending is slated to increase over that same time frame from $1.4 to $1.9 billion in 1999.

How can this be, since spending is being cut? The answer is the dirty-little secret of Federal budgeting: the budget is rigged to favor higher spending. Spending increases are built into the budget even before Congress considers spending cuts. As a result, the best Congress can ever do is reduce the growth of spending. Real spending cuts—where spending is reduced below actual spending levels is virtually unheard of and almost never done in Washington.

Current law requires budget proposals to be measured against a baseline which includes an automatic adjustment for inflation-plus all legislated changes scheduled to take effect rather than against actual spending levels. Against this baseline, any effort to simply slow down spending growth is shown as a cut, even if spending for the program would actually be higher than in the previous year.

The budget baseline's bias toward higher spending is very real. As Professor Allen Schick, one of the Nation's foremost experts on the budget process, wrote in his book "The Capacity To Budget,"

> The current services budget. . .complicates doing that which is difficult to do even under the most favorable circumstances—cutting into the base. This is a significant bias because the difference between "current expenditures" and "current services" often is the most effective margin of choice for congressional decisionmakers. That is, when they cut programs, they frequently do so by holding the dollars increase below the rate of inflation.

To change this bias toward increased spending, our amendment requires that proposed spending for discretionary programs be compared to actual current-year spending levels, rather than solely to inflated projections of those levels for the forthcoming fiscal years.

Our amendment accomplishes this through four specific provisions:

First, it amends the legal definition of the baseline so that it no longer assumes automatic growth in discretionary spending due to inflation.

Second, it requires both the President and Congress to compare their budgets to the amount actually spent the prior year, rather than solely against the inflated baseline.

Third, it stipulates that Congressional Budget Office [CBO] cost estimates of pending legislation must include a comparison to the change in spending from the prior year's level.

Finally, our amendment instructs CBO to enumerate all the programs funded on an automatic, open-ended basis rather than subject to annual congressional review (entitlement programs) and identify the reasons behind their projected growth.

The Spratt bill, H.R. 4907, simply adds a second official baseline that is called current funding while leaving the current-law baseline requiring inflated spending in place. This approach simply does nothing to control spending or give a more accurate picture of actual spending.

Earlier this year, CHARLIE STENHOLM and JOHN KASICH and myself introduced the Common Sense Budget Reform Act, H.R. 4434. The House has debated and passed one of the four reforms proposed by H.R. 4434, expedited and enhanced rescission authority. Two of the remaining three proposals contained in H.R. 4434 are before the House today: the measure we are currently debating and another on emergency appropriations requests. In passing the Penny-Kasich-Stenholm baseline reform amendment and defeating the Spratt amendment, we will continue on the road of real budget process reform. I urge your support for real baseline reform. I urge your vote for the Penny-Kasich-Stenholm amendment.

Mr. SABO. Madam Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. PENNY. I yield briefly to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. SABO. Madam Chairman, would the gentleman tell me how his bill changes the baseline for entitlements, where all the growth fundamentally is?

Mr. PENNY. Madam Chairman, reclaiming my time, we change the measurement of the spending for the entitlement programs in the same manner as the Spratt substitute, which is to say the baseline, if it is spelled out in law, would be a higher spending level.

Mr. SABO. In fact it does not change the baseline for entitlements. In fact, the gentleman's problem is not with the budget; it is with existing law.

Mr. PENNY. I would simply respond to my good friend and colleague from Minnesota, if I were here trying to change the baseline on entitlement programs to make it a hard freeze, he would be opposing that proposition as well. So I think it is a disingenuous question.

Madam Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

☐ 1210

Mr. SPRATT. Madam Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Government Operations, the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. CONYERS].

Mr. CONYERS. Madam Chairman, I would like to point out that the amendment now offered denies the Congress the benefit of valuable and useful budget information. From my point of view, this would prohibit an inflation adjustment from the spending baseline.

While motivated by a desire to deny opportunities for increasing spending, the proposal would probably prohibit useful budget information, namely, the cost of last year's program if continued today, from being considered by the Congress.

Also there is a reality factor here. The concern about a built-in, automatic spending increase ignores the fact that tight discretionary caps, not the way budget data is presented, sets levels of spending.

Third, I would point out that the baseline preserves the role of Congress in setting spending priorities. The reason the budget incorporates baseline adjustments for inflation and other changes in the program is because the budget has to compare funding for different programs in different years. If Congress just passes last year's funding level and the programs actually cost more this year, then the cuts which the agency has to swallow are set by bureaucrats, not by those elected by the voters to represent them.

Finally, I support the bill offered by my distinguished colleague and subcommittee chairman in the Committee on Government Operations, who has put more information before the Congress. In creating two baselines, we will not cause anymore confusion. We will have better than this alternative because it recognizes that the current baseline presents useful information to Congress.

By requiring all information to be available, H.R. 4907 is not harmful to the budget and appropriations process.

I urge that the Stenholm-Penny-Kasich amendment be rejected.

Mr. PENNY. Madam Chairman, I yield 3 minutes and 30 seconds to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KASICH].

Mr. KASICH. Madam Chairman, let me try to put this in even more ways than we already have. We wonder why the American people are for term limits and think this place is so screwed up.

We sit in the Committee on the Budget and we try to figure out what our spending levels are. I want to tell my colleagues, I try to say, how much did we spend last year or is this an increase, is this a cut, what is this? You have to do it from all these baselines.

In last year's budget debate, we actually tried to compare spending using, I am not kidding, folks, the capped baseline, the uncapped baseline, the capped baseline with health care reform, the budget baseline, the revised Bush baseline, the capped baseline with the Bush defense, the House Budget Committee baseline, and the current services baseline.

Any time I tried to ask somebody, what were we doing last year, or is this an increase or a decrease, they would say, which baseline do you want us to use? I am saying ow we ought to forget about the Bush baseline, because we are like 2 years away from when he was President, but we will be using the Bush baseline next year under the current situation.

Now, when we have all these different baselines that we are trying to figure out what our spending level is from, can Members imagine a family in America trying to figure out how much they are going to spend last year based on 10 different ways of comparing it?

As a result of doing that, of course, we get to the picture that has 1,000 words. Only using those baselines, is it possible for the National Science Foundation to get a $221 million increase. The National Science Foundation got a $221 million increase, but in Washington, DC, and all across America, spread across the pages of our newspapers, it was called a $476 million cut. This level of increase, an increase like this that any family would be happy to have in their daily income, this increase, my colleagues, under the current situation is called a cut.

I would like to enter into the record the functions from general government for the concurrent budget resolution that flat out says that we will increase spending from the year before and if we do not increase spending from the year before, it is called a cut. So that everyone across this country, when they are sitting there watching and hearing this debate and they do not know who is right and who is wrong, it will be in the record. Call my office and ask for the record and see the misuses that indicate cuts when in essence, you will see in here, it really is an increase.

And back to this National Science Foundation, this is the Mona Lisa of the debate.

We are going to win this fight with the Penny-Kasich-Stenholm amendment. What is going to happen is there is going to be a procedural effort to say that if we pass current law, we will be okay. After we pass the Penny-Kasich-Stenholm amendment, there will be an amendment that if it gets 218 votes, it will become law. In this situation, we could actually get the whole House to vote for our proposal to bring sanity to the budget process, yet still lose because Members come and vote to retain the status quo.

Members should vote no on the Spratt amendment. We will be back to talk about that later. But Members clearly must come to the floor and put their voting card in the machine, because the American people want honesty in budgeting. They want us here to do what they do at home. Pass Penny-Kasich-Stenholm. Bring sanity to the budget process.

Mr. SPRATT. Madam Chairman, I yield 3 minutes to the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OBEY].

Mr. OBEY. Madam Chairman, I regret to say that the sponsors of the amendment do not understand their own amendment.

They claim that they are making no change in mandatory baselines. That is true if we read section 2 of their proposal. But if Members then read sections 3 and section 4, they will see that they require the very changes in entitlement measurings that they deny that they require. That is why the AARP opposes their amendment. Because while they deny that they have an effect on entitlements, they in fact do require that we compare for Social Security, for instance, that we require spending levels this year with last year without regard to growth in population, without regard to inflation.

If their claim is correct, then the only effect of the proposal would be on the Committee on Appropriations. The only problem is, the Committee on Appropriations already does what they ask. These are the 13 reports which describe the spending baselines for last year versus this year in the 13 bills we report to the House each year.

I invite any Member to come up here right now and show me where we use an inflation-adjusted baseline.

The gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KASICH], I invite him to do that now. Show me where the Committee on Appropriations uses an adjusted inflation baseline. He cannot do it because we do not do it.

Mr. KASICH. Madam Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OBEY. The gentleman can use his own time.

I do not care what he does on the budget resolution. Show me on your time.

Mr. KASICH. Madam Chairman, I already did.

☐ 1220

I will buy you the biggest martini in town if you can show me where the Committee on Appropriations provides for an adjusted appropriation baseline. We do not do it.

So what it means, very simply, is this. If their bill does what they say it does, then it only has an effect on the Committee on Appropriations, and we already do what they say we ought to do. That means this bill is a nothing.

If their claim is incorrect, and they do in fact do what section 3 and 4 says, which is to require the kind of comparison that we put a squeeze on Social Security recipients' real income, then they do something very pernicious, and this amendment ought to be defeated.

However you interpret that depends on how you read this language, but the fact is that this language does not do what its sponsors say it does.

Mr. SPRATT. Madam Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. WAXMAN].

Mr. WAXMAN. Madam Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to the Stenholm substitute.

What Mr. STENHOLM is asking us to do is to change how we talk about the Federal budget in a way that makes no sense—even inside the beltway.

I want to make sure that we are all clear about the differences between the Stenholm substitute and the underlying bill. Mr. SPRATT's bill is a fair and balanced measure that provides for full range of information about changes in the budget from year to year—including information about the effect of inflation and changing economic conditions on programs.

In contrast, the Stenholm substitute would not give a fair and balanced picture of the Federal budget. Instead, it is designed to advance a political, agenda to confuse the American public about the Federal budget. Under the Stenholm substitute any increase in spending from the previous year would be made to appear as if the President or Congress had increased spending even when the increase was only the result of inflation or growth in the population.

For those who might question whether there is a political agenda here, I would only point out that the Stenholm substitute would apply different rules to subsidies provided through the tax code. For tax expenditures, Mr. STENHOLM would require that "projected economic factors" be taken into account. For social programs like Medicare, these factors would not be considered.

Why is this? Why is Medicare not affected by economic factors, but intangible drilling, exploration and development costs for oil and gas producers are? The question answers itself.

Mr. STENHOLM wants us to tell the American people that if spending on Federal programs increases just to take account of inflation or increases in the number of beneficiaries, the increase is, in effect, an expansion of the program—even through nothing has changed.

Let's take a simple example. Let's look at what this will mean for a Medicare beneficiary—let's call her Mrs. Smith—and her doctor in a small rural community.

Under current law, Medicare pays physicians on the basis of a fee schedule. It increases the fee schedules each year to reflect the increased overhead that physicians face due to higher labor costs, office rent, supplies, and malpractice premiums.

Right now, Medicare will pay 80 percent of the fee schedule amount for an office visit. Let us say in Mrs. Smith's area, the Medicare fee schedule is $50. So Medicare pays $40, and she pays $10.

Next year, Medicare increases its fee schedule in the area to, say, $55. Medicare still covers 80 percent, so it will pay $44, and she will pay $11.

Now, under Mr. STEMHOLM's amendment, the budget would only show that Medicare spending had increased by $4. It wouldn't show that Medicare spending had to increase by $4 just to keep Mrs. Smith even.

We didn't entitle Mrs. Smith to any new services. We didn't make more people eligible for the program. And we keep the limits on physician spending—limits which are enforced through updates to the fee schedule—in place.

In fact, all we did was to keep or promise to Mrs. Smith to pay 80 percent of her doctor bills. Yet under Mr. Stenholm's approach, keeping our promise is displayed as a program expansion.

Now if we asked Mrs. Smith whether we had expanded Medicare, she would look at us as if we had lost our minds. Her out-of-pocket costs have gone up $1—and would have gone up $5 if Medicare had not paid its share.

Under the Stenholm substitute, the only way we could say that the Medicare program did to expand would be no freeze the fee schedule at $50. Meanwhile, back in the real world, Mrs. Smith's doctor has this problem. His labor costs, office rent, and supplies are still going up, so he'll have to raise his fees if he wants to keep his practice going.

Let's say he raises his fee to $55. Mrs. Smith will have to pay the full $5 increase, as well as the $10 coinsurance.

What do you think Mrs. Smith would say if we were to ask her whether Medicare had just been cut? She'd look at us as if we had lost our minds. Of course it has been cut, she would say; it is only common sense.

I think most Americans know a program cut when they see one. That's what the Stenholm substitute is, and no amount of semantic juggling can disguise it.

I urge a vote for common sense and against the substitute.

Madam Chairman, I have a letter here from the American Association of Retired Persons, and they are against the Stenholm-Penny amendment. They say it would create a budget make-believe scenario in which people did not age. I also have a letter from the White House in opposition.

Madam Chairman, I include these letters for the RECORD:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, DC, August 12, 1994.

Hon. THOMAS S. FOLEY,
House of Representatives, Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: On behalf of the President and his economic team, we are writing again to urge members of the House of Representatives to oppose the Stenholm-Penny-Kasich substitute and to express our preference for the Spratt Full Budget Disclosure proposal. We want to clarify that this substitute would prohibit the use of economically-important information such as inflation in determining baselines for the discretionary budget. This would be a set-back for rational and reasonable budget-policy making.

A far more balanced and fair approach is the one included in the Spratt Baseline Budget proposal, which would allow for comparisons to both current funding levels and what it would take to maintain current policy.

The Stenholm-Penny-Kasich alternative would eliminate real comparisons of how year-to-year spending would actually impact on the services provided to real people's lives. No credible form of budgeting in today's economy completely disallows taking into account changes in inflation. Consider a five-year period during which inflation or the cost of living increases by 3% each year. The compounded total inflation is 16%. If a program, like Head Start, WIC or veterans' hospitals were to be cut 10% in real terms, the Stenholm-Penny-Kasich substitute would require that this cut to millions of Americans be presented only as a spending increase. Such a budget requirement would make the budget process less forthright and less informative as to how year-to-year changes were affecting real people's lives.

The Spratt proposal, on the other hand, would provide a fair, balanced and full-information alternative. It would allow two methods of budget reporting—both the present system of comparing budget proposals to the "current services baseline" and comparisons of changes in actual dollar amounts from year to year.

We urge you to oppose the Stenholm-Penny-Kasich substitute and to support the Spratt Baseline Budget proposal.

Sincerely,

ALICE M. RIVLIN,
Acting Director, Office of Management and Budget.

ROBERT E. RUBIN,
Assistant to the President for Economic Policy.

VOTE FOR H.R. 4907

VOTE AGAINST STENHOLM/PENNY/KASICH SUBSTITUTE

H.R. 4907 requires two baselines in the budget format:

(1) A "current funding baseline," representing actual funding for a function or program in the current year—what CBO calls a "freeze."

(2) A "current policy baseline," representing what is commonly called the "current services" level of funding.

The "current funding baseline" shows how much spending will increase or decrease.

The "current policy baseline" shows next year's cost of keeping a program running at the same level as this year without any change in policy.

Both baselines are useful, and H.R. 4907 provides for both.

Stenholm/Penny/Kasich provides for only one baseline and bans use of the "current policy" or "current services baseline."

AARP supports Spratt (H.R. 4907) and says the substitute will "lead to enormous pressure to cut programs such as Social Security and Medicare."

OMB supports Spratt (H.R. 4907) and calls Stenholm/Penny/Kasich "a set-back for rational budget policy-making."

AARP,
August 12, 1994.

Hon. JOHN M. SPRATT, Jr.,
House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

DEAR REPRESENTATIVE SPRATT: The American Association of Retired Persons (AARP) supports your legislation H.R. 4907, the Full Budget Disclosure Act. The legislation would allow year to year changes in the budget baseline for discretionary and mandatory spending levels to be described in two ways: a current funding baseline and a current policy baseline. This dual track approach allows for a reasonable and informative presentation of budget data that can promote meaningful debate about how to allocate budget resources.

The Association opposes a substitute that will be offered by Representatives Penny, Kasich and Stenholm. Current budgeting procedure for entitlements recognizes that spending levels need to be adjusted for increases in the beneficiary population and changes in inflation and in the economy. The substitute would require budgets to be presented without these adjustments. This is patently unreasonable. In effect, it would create a budget make believe scenario in which people don't age.

Portraying year to year changes in Social Security and Medicare without adjustments for such basic factors is misleading and is certain to intensify efforts to cut benefits for reasons that are unrelated to the needs of these programs. For example, under the substitute, cost of living adjustments (COLAs) would be viewed as a spending increase despite the fact they are the only means to help beneficiaries keep up with rising costs for goods an services. This flies in the face of Congress' original intent providing for annual COLAs.

AARP believes that Congressional debate about the budget must be based on an accurate portrayal of our spending needs and commitments. Your legislation helps achieve this goal.

Sincerely,

JOHN ROTHER,
Director,
Legislation and Public Policy.

Mr. PENNY. Madam Chairman, I yield 1½ minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. FINGERHUT].

Mr. FINGERHUT. Madam Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

Madam Chairman, this is an important debate, and I am glad we are having it on the floor. I rise in support of the Penny-Kasich-Stenholm amendment and in opposition to the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. SPRATT].

The argument here seems to be that good government, consistent government, requires reporting these different kinds of baselines. I served in the Ohio State Senate, as did the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KASICH], and I served on the Finance Committee. We had a large budget, nowhere near what the budget of the Federal Government is, but we had a large budget.

Every year we sat down with how much we spent last year and what the recommendations of the Governor were for spending for the next year, and we debated the alternatives offered by the majority and the minority party about how much programs needed to be increased or what other programs could survive at the current levels, or even could take cuts. It did not seem to us that we misunderstood the concept that some programs' expenses grew and other programs' expenses did not grow. We understood it, we debated it, we explained it, and we made decisions.

The second serious argument that is made on the floor here today is with regard to entitlements. Entitlement programs, particularly those that impact senior citizens, do expand in cost every year. They expand in cost for two reasons. One is that the number of seniors who are eligible for those programs, particularly Social Security and Medicare, grow; and the second is that we have adopted some laws, this body has adopted laws, which increase payments automatically. They are commonly called COLA's.

It seems to me again, Madam Chairman, that these are not concepts that we cannot explain to the public. Indeed, we would do much better if we did explain to them that the reason why we are spending more money on Medicare next year, and we are spending more money next year on Medicare, and we will the year after that, and we will the year after that, is because there are more seniors, and because their costs have gone up. It is an honest way of explaining it. They might just support the increase.

Mr. SPRATT. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SABO], the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Budget.

Mr. SABO. Madam Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment. There is lots of rhetoric today, and a lot of it I think goes by what actually happens.

The reality is, we need different measurements as we look at this year's budget, as we look at budgets over a period of time. The Spratt bill, his substitute basically says we look at a variety of ways of measuring the budget. That is what we should do.

My friends who offer this amendment say, if I understand their amendment correctly, that we consider inflation, we consider changes in beneficiaries, for all the entitlement programs, but if we look at any historic pattern of what happens with discretionary spending, we ignore the impact of inflation. That makes no sense to me.

I have listened and read the rhetoric from the advocates of this amendment. They fundamentally disagree with existing law, which provides for inflation adjustment for a whole series of programs. They object to having, automatically, additional participants come into the program. They really would like that to be wiped off the books. That is not a budgetary problem, that is a problem of law.

Madam Chairman, if they want to fundamentally change that, they should introduce a bill to repeal indexing, repeal automatic growth in beneficiaries for programs. Then that would reflect in what we do in budgets. That is really what they want to do.

I say to the gentleman, then do it, put a bill in. Have hearings on it. I would not agree with it, but that would be the honest way to deal with it. What they are talking about is not a problem of the budget, it is a problem of law that they do not agree with. The budget reflects current law, which it should do.

Madam Chairman, if anything, their proposal skews the whole budget process in understanding it more toward entitlements and away from the options of discretionary spending, where the Congress makes judgments each year.

As I said earlier, Madam Chairman, to measure the budget between this year and last year is accurate. To measure it in other fashions is also accurate. To measure it in other fashions is also accurate, and needs to be part of what we look at when we understand the Federal budget.

Mr. PENNY. Madam Chairman, I yield 2½ minutes to my colleague, the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM].

Mr. STENHOLM. Madam Chairman, I want to commend and acknowledge to the Committee on Appropriations that the reports that they put out do accurately reflect last year's spending and this year's spending, and the baseline argument is irrelevant to the appropriations process, as it, in fact, pertains to appropriation bills. I am curious as to why they are fussing so much about this, however, from that standpoint. That I do not understand.

Madam Chairman, it is also interesting, when we start looking at the mandatory, for the most part, both of our bills are exactly alike in what we call for regarding mandatory proposals. The only difference is they require that both baselines be presented to the public.

We provide that only one baseline be presented to the public. That is the only reason why we are here occupying the House's time today, is because we believe the American public needs to understand the one baseline.

The Penny amendment does not prevent anyone, though, from putting pen to paper and figuring out how much a program need to be increased in order to keep up with inflation. As the gentleman from South Carolina, JOHN SPRATT, said yesterday, the Committee on the Budget will continue to provide various options for spending levels on different programs.

That is fine. That provides very good, necessary information for the policymakers to make those decisions. However, the heart of the argument today is very simple. To the American people, we need to present one baseline, comparing to last year's spending. If it is in mandatory spending, we do it exactly the same way the Spratt amendment is. We say "Let us show the American people why the increases are, in fact, there, whether they are by law or whether they are by any other estimation, or whether they are by any other action of this Congress."

What I am really opposed to is in our budget, in which, in Function 800, for example, 1993 spending was $12.3 billion, 1998 spending under a freeze is $13.9 billion.

To me that is an increase of 1.6. But according to what we put out to the American people, it is a cut of 0.6. That is the relevancy of this whole argument today. That is the only thing that is relevant. That is why I say support the Penny-Kasich-Stenholm amendment, oppose the Spratt amendment, and let us present to the American people one honest presentation of the budget.

Madam Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Penny-Kasich-Stenholm amendment which would bring greater honesty to the budget process by eliminating the current services baseline and replacing it with a baseline that would be based on the previous year's spending levels.

The current budget process is enormously confusing and strongly biased in favor of deficit spending. Baseline budgeting distorts the budget process by making it appear that programs are incurring a spending cut when, in fact, they simply are receiving a smaller increase than expected.

The base bill before us today improves the current process by ensuring that Members will be able to compare proposed spending levels with the previous year's spending levels. I am concerned, however, that creating two official baselines will create additional confusion in the budget process. More importantly, the base bill will continue the current bias toward higher spending created by the current services budget.

Our amendment would eliminate the bias toward higher spending and put some west Texas tractor seat common sense in the budget process by requiring that budget proposals compare their budgets to the amount actually spent the prior year ranter than against estimates of future spending. We should recognize increases in spending for what they are and not talk about cutting spending when we really are increasing spending.

The folks at the Stamford Dairy Queen understand that if you received $100 last year and receive $99 this year, that is a spending cut. If you receive $101 this year, that is an increase, even if you expected to receive $102 this year. The small business men and women of this country understand that if you're operating in the red, you cannot afford to give cost-of-living increases to everyone.

The argument that our amendment will narrow the amount of information available to Members when making budget decisions is wrong. Our amendment does not prevent anyone from taking a calculator and figuring out how much a program needed to be increased in order to keep up with inflation or other factors. As we all know, there are countless benchmarks that are used to compare proposed spending levels. For example, Members can easily find out how much it would cost to fully fund Head Start, meet the national security objective or any other number of projected spending levels that are not officially part of the baseline. The Budget Committee will continue to provide Members with various options for spending levels on different programs, including the amount that a program needed to increase to keep pace with inflation. To argue that eliminating the official status of current services budgeting will somehow prevent anyone from providing this information is extremely misleading. What our amendment would do is take away the official status given to these inflated estimates that is used to create a presumption that programs should be increased at the rate of inflation.

I completely concur that there are programs that need and deserve increases in spending form last year's level for any number of good and valid reasons. Our amendment does not prevent us from increasing spending on programs. What it does is force us to debate these increases for what they are and require that supporters of programs justify why they should be increased instead of relying on current services budgeting to automatically justify an increase. We cannot afford to assume that spending on every program will increase by 3 or 4 percent a year.

There have been some suggestions that if this substitute passes, we will have to explain to Social Security recipients or military retirees why they will not be harmed if Congress provides identical funding levels from 1 year to the next. Anyone who has read our amendment knows that this argument is a red herring. Our amendment allows the baseline to reflect increases in spending that are required by law such as COLA's for military and civilian retirees and Social Security as well as other entitlement programs. Our amendment will bring greater accountability to these programs, however, by requiring the Congressional Budget Office to report on the specific reasons for growth in these blank check items. By bringing greater attention to all of the sources of growth in entitlement spending, we hope to further the educational process about these programs.

By changing the way we talk about budgetary decisions, our amendment will improve the decisionmaking process and the outcome of these decisions. Vote for the Penny-Kasich-Stenholm amendment to bring common sense into the budget process.

Mr. SPRATT. Madam Chairman, I yield myself 3½ minutes.

Madam Chairman, the opposition to our base bill, supporters of this substitute, come down to making the argument that what we are talking about is public perception, we want the public to be able to understand the budget better, and I fully appreciate that argument. But I think we have obscured in our zeal to make this argument the fact that the baselines now provided to the public and to the Congress and to anyone else who cares to look amply at lay out existing spending. We had Congressional Research Service go through the different budget documents and tell us how baseline spending was presented. Here, for example, is a page from the President's budget:

Current Services Estimates, the first column in it is 1993 Actual. We have got an actual spending line.

Here is a CBO projection of outlays by category in the budget outlook published twice a year. The first column, in Outlays by Category is Actual 1993 Spending.

Here is a page taken from the report accompanying the budget resolution issued by the Committee on the Budget, Committee Recommendation, Function 570, Medicare. The first two columns: Budget Authority in the current year for discretionary spending and mandatory spending; and Outlays, actual spending. The actual baseline is presented there.

Here is a page from an appropriation bill. The same thing. Here is a comparative statement of new budget authority. All of these provide it.

The Budget Act, Section 1105, subsection 7 provides that the President must submit appropriation expenditures and receipts to the Government in the prior fiscal year as a beginning point of the budget so we can compare it.

All we are doing is taking that requirement and making it explicit as we extend it to the Committee on the Budget and to the CBO.

It is important that the public understand it but let us not lose sight of the fact that we have a stake in the budget, too, here in the Congress, a big stake. It is important that we understand the budget. It is important that we have it laid out and formatted and arrayed and displayed so that we can make use of it and use it as a working document because we have to make rational decisions based upon it.

In that connection, we have created something called the current services baseline and we did not create it to obfuscate, to obscure, we created it because it is useful, it is useful to know what it is going to take in order to keep existing programs going.

This current services budget is designed to show what receipts, what outlays, what budget authority will have to be if no changes are made to existing law. It does not say we cannot make the changes but it tells us, it tells the public, this is what we are going to have to do if we are not going to change permanent underlying entitlement and mandatory spending law. It warns us of future problems, it provides a starting point. All of these things are useful to have and that is why they exist. Not because we want to obscure or obfuscate.

What we have had on the other side in the support of this substitute is a strawman. The opponents of this base bill have created a strawman, a construct to the budget that does not correspond to reality. As the chairman of the Committee on the Budget in talking about his resolutions has pointed out, as the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations has pointed out, actual spending baselines are there, we are going to keep them, enshrine them and require they be presented. But we are also going to keep something we have found useful, something that is going to exist regardless of the outcome of this vote, the current services baseline. We need both and that is why we need to vote down this substitute and vote for the base bill.

Mr. PENNY. Madam Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. DEAL].

Mr. DEAL. Madam Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding me the time.

Madam Chairman, I rise in support of the Penny-Stenholm-Kasich substitute.

Madam Chairman, we live in an age when it is difficult to know what is real and what is illusion. We are entertained by movies that distort reality through the skill of film splicers and the mixing of real people with cartoons.

In this body, however, we should make every effort to deal with facts and figures that are real. First of all, our deliberations are in the public view and we have a responsibility to simplify rather than confuse the public.

When Congress wisely decided to freeze discretionary spending at 1993 levels for 5 years, we placed ourselves in the same position as a working family that does not get a raise in their paycheck for 5 years. If you do not receive any more money this year than you did last year, you are certainly deceiving yourself if you drift off into the world of illusion. It might be nice to think about inflation and certainly you must consider the fact that a new baby may have been born—but if the dollars available this year are the same as they were last year—that is reality. It is this same reality that Congress must deal with.

Madam Chairman, I urge the adoption of this substitute.

Mr. SPRATT. Madam Chairman, I yield the balance of my time to the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DERRICK].

Mr. DERRICK. Madam Chairman, the committee ought to reject the Penny-Kasich-Stenholm amendment for one principal reason: It simply will not result in full budget disclosure. In fact, it will remove valuable, important information from the budget debate and will result in the American people having less information about the effect of Federal spending proposals, not more.

Madam Chairman, the current policy baseline that the President, the Congressional Budget Office, the congressional budget committees, and other use serves an important and valuable purposes. Every American knows inflation over time erodes the purchasing power of tax dollars just a it erodes the purchasing power of individuals' incomes. When developing budget proposals for future years, the president and Congress must consider inflation's effect on the dollar and how many goods and services the dollar will buy.

If a program's funding is held below the level of inflation next year, then effectively the program has been cut since inflated dollars will buy slightly less next year than they buy now. I say slightly because fortunately inflation is extremely low right now. It has been argued that use of the current policy baseline allows policymaker to call increases in actual dollars cuts. That is true if they are making comparisons to the current policy baseline. But it is also true that the current policy baseline allows policmakers to characterize cuts as increases where spending, though higher in actual dollars, does not keep pace with inflation.

This is why it is important to adopt the base bill, so we can have a current funding baseline against which to compare budget proposals. If a program gets $100 million this year and inflation is 3 percent, then it would take $103 million next year to deliver the same level of services. If the President proposed $102 million for the program, then with the additional baseline proposed in this bill, nobody would be deceived. People could compare the proposal to the two baselines and see readily that the proposal is an increase of $2 million over this year, but $1 million short of the amount required to keep pace with inflation.

If the amendment eliminated the current policy baseline altogether, then policymaker could get away with calling the $102 million figure an increase, and the beneficiaries of the program might not really know it isn't actually enough to stay even.

That would be just like passing a law to skip next year's Social Security cost-of-living adjustment and telling the beneficiaries "We didn't cut your benefits. You'll get the same $614 per month net year that you get this year." The statement would be technically correct, but it would not tell the whole story.

Madam Chairman, the Spratt bill will enable policymakers and the American people to see the whole story. The pending amendment would facilitate the same type of double-talk that the proponents say now occurs, only in a different way. The result would still be less than full budget disclosure.

Madam Chairman. I urge the committee to reject the amendment and support the Spratt bill.

Madam Chairman, I include for the RECORD a letter urging support of the Spratt proposal, as follows:

THE WHITE HOUSE,
Washington, August 12, 1994.

Hon. THOMAS S. FOLEY,
House of Representatives,
Washington, DC.

DEAR MR. Acting Director,
Office of Management and Budget.
ROBERT E. RUBIN,
Assistant to the President,
for Economic Policy.

Mr. PENNY. Madam Chairman, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Illinois [Mr. FAWELL].

Mr. FAWELL. Madam Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Kasich-Penny-Stenholm amendment which sounds to me like just eminent common sense.

As we all know, our current budget process includes many pro-spending biases. Most notable, the current services budget utilizes a baseline which assumes that we will budget as if all programs are left to grow on automatic pilot. According to the Congressional Budget Office, over the next 5 years, total Federal spending will increase by $360 billion from $1.47 to $1.83 trillion. During the same period, the Federal debt will increase from $4.6 to $6.3 trillion. We are not making progress on the national debt, and we should be honest with our constituents about our spending habits.

Under the current services baseline, any reduction is labeled a spending cut regardless of the fact that the actual spending level is above the prior year's level. For example, many of us were attacked for allegedly voting for $31 billion in Medicare cuts contained in the recent Penny-Kasich package. During the 5 years affected by Penny-Kasich, the Congressional Budget Office estimated that Medicare spending will rise from $143 to $239 billion, a 67-percent increase. In other words, even if the Penny-Kasich plan was adopted, Medicare spending would still rise from $143 billion to approximately $230 billion during the same period, a 61-percent increase. Even the largest deficit reduction package considered by Congress, the Solomon-Fawell-Upton budget, which would have reduced the deficit by $698 billion over 5 years and resulted in a Federal budget surplus in 1999, would have permitted total Government spending to increase, albeit less than if we left the budget on autopilot.

We simply cannot leave our budget on autopilot. We must face the fact that Government spending is out of control, and carefully consider any spending increases. Rather than assume that programs are entitled to automatic spending increases, we need to require departments and agencies to make their case to Congress for spending increases. The Stenholm-Penny-Kasich amendment recognizes this and would change our budgetary process to compare proposed spending levels with the current-year funding levels. While this and other budgetary reforms are not a substitute to real spending cuts, the change is important. By using rhetorical devices biased toward spending increases, the current budget process promotes higher spending levels. Eliminating these biases will promote greater fiscal responsibility.

I urge all Members to support the Stenholm-Penny-Kasich amendment, and oppose the Spratt proposal.

Mr. PENNY. Madam Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Madam Chairman, fundamentally this is a debate about how Washington works. Our process here naturally unfortunately confuses the American people and does little to edify and inform them. We have appropriations in the Congress who constantly blame entitlements for causing the deficit. Yet when we bring entitlement cuts to the floor, they typically vote against them. We have legislators who clamor for a balanced budget amendment and yet they do not vote for the taxes or the spending cuts required to reach a balanced budget. We have Democrats who voted for Clinton's budget, declaring that it essentially beats or licks the deficit when under the Clinton budget we have deficits remaining in a $200 billion range as far as the eye can see and entitlements remain uncontrolled. We have Republicans who blast Clinton's budget as unacceptable and one that does not cut enough. Yet they were unable to come together on a plan of their own that did as much in terms of deficit reduction.

With all of the nonsense that surrounds the debate over the budget, we in this Congress finally owe the American people at least one bit of common sense: We need to give them a budget in which a freeze is actually a freeze, in which cuts are actually cuts. The only way to do that is to vote for the Penny-Kasich-Stenholm amendment. I urge a "yes" vote.

Mr. PORTMAN. Madam Chairman, I rise today to express my strong support for the Penny-Kasich-Stenholm substitute amendment to H.R. 4907, the Full Budget Disclosure Act. It is time that we bring some integrity, honesty, and accountability to the budgeting process.

It is time to end the kind of gimmickry that could only exist in Congress: where an increase in spending can be touted as a spending cut. This amendment would simplify the current budget process by requiring that all budgetary proposals be compared with actual spending levels of the past year instead of baseline estimates. This would bring some rationality to the process. It would bring our budget process in line with those of our constituents. A spending increase would actually be an increase from last year's funding levels, while a spending cut would represent a true decrease. The Penny-Kasich-Stenholm amendment provides for genuine reform to the current confusing and dishonest baseline budgeting process.

Under the current system, Members of Congress can argue that they are supporting spending cuts which are actually increases over last year's levels. They do so because the funding levels are below a so-called baseline, which takes into consideration inflation and economic and demographic factors. Unamended, H.R. 4907 does little to address this problem, because it does not change the statutory definition of baselines, thereby preserving the inflated baseline.

On the other hand, the Penny-Kasich-Stenholm amendment eliminates all of the budget gimmicks that are currently used to shield Members from having to make real spending cuts. I urge my colleagues to vote for real reforms to the baseline budgeting process—support the Penny-Kasich-Stenholm amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Michigan. Madam Chairman, I rise today in strong support of the Penny-Kasich-Stenholm amendment to bring truth in budgeting to the Federal budget process. The Penny-Kasich-Stenholm amendment will require the Federal Government to use last year's funding level in planning for the next year's budget.

It is the right thing to do. For years, Congress has allowed the baseline to automatically include inflation without discussion. Now, under the new baseline of last year's spending level, we will be allowed to compare spending from year to year honestly—without confusion.

For Americans everywhere, that plan their budget based on the amount they are paid—not on what they assume they should spend after an adjustment for inflation, this bill is honest and understandable.

Madam Chairman, the passage of the Penny-Kasich-Stenholm amendment is a giant step forward to have honesty in budgeting. It is the right thing to do.

Mr. FRANKS of New Jersey. Madam Chairman, only in Washington, DC, can people describe an increase in spending as a spending cut. They can do this because of something called baseline budgeting, where estimates of inflation costs, new recipients and other economic projections become built in to future government spending. Only funding that goes beyond such estimates has to be called a spending increase.

If Congress does limit a real funding increase to less than these estimates, any of us can then talk as if we actually cut a program's spending. This practice—where a spending increase is called a cut—corrupts all talk about budgets here in Washington.

Madam Chairman, if we in Congress are truly serious about controlling spending, we must begin by eliminating such accounting tricks as baseline budgeting. We need to use real spending numbers as our basic budget reference, like what was spent last year on any program or department.

Madam Chairman, I urge my colleagues to support the Stenholm-Penny-Kasich amendment. Congress should be willing to talk about money like America's families do, where more money being spent could never be called a cut. Let's begin cleaning up the way we talk about spending here in Congress, let's eliminate baseline budgeting today.

Mr. GALLO. Madam Chairman, I rise today in support of the Penny-Stenholm-Kasich substitute to the legislation under consideration. I believe that this substitute will lend a much-needed measure of clarity to the Federal budget process.

As a former member of the Budget Committee and a current member of the Appropriation Committees, I understand and appreciate the effort the gentleman from South Carolina is making with his bill. I believe, however, that his effort can be improved by adoption of the substitute.

Adoption of this substitute will not forbid us to consider what spending levels might be needed from one year to the next in order to maintain a certain program at current services. It will, however, force us to state clearly exactly how our spending in 1 year compares with that in the previous year in ways that everyone can understand.

By using a measure that every American family uses to run its household—comparing this year's spending to last year's—the American people will finally be able to see whether Congress is truly cutting spending or not.

Adoption of the substitute will, once and for all, put an end to the curious phenomena in Washington—where spending more money this year than last year can actually be considered a spending cut.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment is the nature of a substitute offered by the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PENNY].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. PENNY. Madam Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The CHAIRMAN. Pursuant to the rule, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. SPRATT] will be recognized for 15 minutes, and a Member opposed will be recognized for 15 minutes.

Is the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PENNY] opposed?

Mr. PENNY. Madam Chairman, I am opposed to the amendment, and I would request the time.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PENNY] will be recognized for 15 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. SPRATT].

Mr. SPRATT. Madam Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Chairman, I rise to move for judgment notwithstanding the verdict.

Madam Chairman, Members of the House have registered their opinion strongly in favor of having available to them and to the public a current funding baseline and the presentations we received from Budget Committee and from the Congressional Budget Office for functions and programs in the budget.

This bill before us, H.R. 4907, this bill about which we are to vote now, provides for that very same current funding baseline. It is in fact identical. We have agreed, there is no difference between current funding baseline required in the bill before us and in the required funding baseline in the Penny-Kasich-Stenholm substitute.

So you can have your cake and eat it too, because this bill clearly provides for that baseline which the House has just said it would like to have arrayed, presented, displayed in the budget presentations that come to the House.

But in addition, this bill would provide for a current policy or a current services baseline. What is a current services baseline?

Let me just read to the committee what the President's budget describes to be the current services baseline. It says it is designed to show what receipts, outlays, deficits, and budget authority would be if no changes are made in laws already enacted.

This baseline is not a prediction of the final outcome of the budget process nor is it a proposed budget; it is largely a mechanical application of existing laws. By itself, it commits no one to any particular policy, it does not constrain the choices available, but the commitments or constraints reflected in this are inherent in tax and spending policies contained in current law.

I submit to everyone here that it exists for a reason. It exists because it is useful, it exists because we have found it necessary for various reasons to have a current services baseline in order to do the budget every year.

The minority report to the Committee on Rules itself makes the case for having a current services baseline when it acknowledges if you are going to do reconciliation, you have to have a projection of what mandatory spending is going to be so you can reconcile against that, in order to reduce, if not cut, spending, at least reduce the rate of increase in spending. You have got to have a current services baseline to do it.

The argument is made here that the public needs to know exactly how much we are increasing the budget in actual dollars and cents, and we will give them that information because we have the same baseline.

But Congress also has, I argued earlier, a huge stake in the budget itself. We have to make the budget documents, as prepared by the President, by the Office of Management and Budget, by CBO, by our own budget committee's working documents useful to us, so we can make comparisons, project spending and know what we have got to cut.

Let me submit to the House also that the public has an interest as well in knowing what current services are, because the current services baseline is a way of telling the public this is what it costs to keep programs such as social security and Medicare, popular programs, in place, running in place in existing law. If we are going to be able to continue the level of benefits adjusted for inflation for the expanding beneficiary population, this is what we have to spend. It is useful for us, in fact it is necessary for us, in order to do the budget because that constitutes well over 50 percent of the budget today.

But it is also useful for us to tell the public this is what we have to spend if we are going to keep pace with inflation if we are going to keep pace with the growing beneficiary population.

I think both we and the public need this additional baseline. You do not deny yourselves a thing by voting for the Spratt bill because the Spratt bill will preserve the baseline that we have just now dictated ought to be in the, must be, in the budget, but it will also give us a very useful baseline, a current services baseline.

I submit we should vote "yes" on this and have our cake and eat it too.

Madam Chairman, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. PENNY. Madam Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Fundamentally, this vote is simply designed to defeat the motion that was just adopted. If you voted "yes" on Penny-Kasich-Stenholm, you absolutely must vote "no" on Spratt because this amendment simply restores language that is in the base bill. If you vote for the previous amendment, you vote against this amendment.

This is one of those Capitol Hill procedures where we can do something and then undo it on a subsequent vote. It is another nonsensical procedure, but it happens all the time. The only way we can defeat this king-of-the-hill game is to vote no on Spratt.

The issue at play is the same. The debate will be almost identical to the debate just concluded, and for that reason I do not know that we need to eat up a lot of time here.

Bear in mind this measure supersedes the vote we just cast. To be consistent vote no on Spratt.

I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SPRATT. Madam Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Alabama [Mr. BEVILL].

Mr. BEVILL. Madam Chairman, I rise in support of the Spratt amendment and urge the Members to vote yes on this. We are in effect saying here this amendment that we have just passed, of course if it stays into effect, we are just in effect saying that we should not have any cost-of-living expenses on Social Security, cost of living. We are saying to some of my projects, like the flood control where we are talking about saving lives, we are saying, "You'll have to assume the inflation, and you can only put 90 percent of the bill, that flood control project."

We can just go on and on, and it just does not make sense to have this kind of change. It is false economics, and I urge everyone to vote for the Spratt amendment.

Mr. PENNY. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KASICH].

Mr. KASICH. Madam Chairman, we are going to have to get Mona Lisa out one more time here to explain what we are doing.

Now let me, first of all, say categorically this does not affect entitlement programs, and I am opposed to doing anything that has any impact whatsoever on Social Security, as what happened out here when we came out on our entitlement spending program. This is only discretionary spending.

This is the Mona Lisa. Now this Mona Lisa has a frown rather than a smile. What the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. SPRATT] wants to do in his bill is to continue to have a chart that confuses people in terms of what our budgeting process is.

One more time, Madam Chairman, this represents a $221 million increase in spending. It is described across the newspapers of this country as a $476 million cut.

Now what we just passed was a proposal that budgets like they do in west Texas, and like they do in Minnesota, and like they do in Ohio, and what we are saying is an increase or a decrease in spending will be determined by what we spent the previous year. That is what we just passed.

Now we went on a baseball strike, we are in a baseball strike, but we play a little baseball here this morning because we just doubled off the wall with the Penny-Kasich-Stenholm amendment. We doubled off the wall because we actually passed the elimination of this kind of spending, this kind of budgeting. It is gone. The runner is on second base, and now there is a line drive in the outfield, and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. SPRATT] wants to throw the runner out at second base and continue to confuse the issue.

What I am suggesting here today is let us bring the runner home, let us drive the runner access the plate, and let us complete the job today, and, by completing the job today, we will budget like they do in west Texas, and in Minnesota, in Ohio and California, just like families do it.

We must reject this because, if we do not reject it, even though it is an improvement in the process, it will still be awfully confusing. The last thing we need with a $6 trillion national debt and budget deficits in the outyears projected to skyrocket is confusion when we try to communicate to the taxpayers of this country. Let us call a cut a cut.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KASICH] has expired.

Mr. PENNY. Madam Chairman, I yield 30 additional seconds to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KASICH].

Mr. KASICH. Just remember this picture. We do not want to keep doing it this way, and, if my colleagues do not want to keep doing it this way because the American people do not want to do it this way, reject the Spratt substitute. Let us keep the Penny and Stenholm amendment in place, and let us get back to something where we can communicate to everyone without confusion so that we can deal rationally and sensibly with the Federal budget programs.

Mr. SPRATT. Madam Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume, and would the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KASICH] remain in the well?

I say to the gentleman,

> After your baseball analogy I feel a little like Abbott and Costello, who's on first, who's on second. I'm not sure where you're coming from because I have heard you argue repeatedly with regard to the defense budgets that it needs to be stated in the current services context. It's useful for us to know that $280 billion in 1990 doesn't buy $280 billion of defense in 1995. Why not let the Congress and the public have that kind of projection of what it costs to keep our defense apace with the——

Mr. KASICH. Madam Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SPRATT. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. KASICH. Madam Chairman, I am glad the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. SPRATT] raised the issue because, when we were voting on the last amendment, several Members on our side argued we think it is more useful to list defense spending on the basis of the baseline, and I said I think that is wrong. I think we ought to list defense as an increase or a decrease based the same way we do with everything else, and I would tell the gentleman,

> When you're trying to discuss increases or decreases in the Budget Committee, if you just ignore baselines, people don't even know what language you're talking in.

So, what I would say to the gentleman is I think it would be helpful in this House if we refer to defense spending increases or cuts based on the previous year's level, not on baselines, and, if the gentleman hears me do that again, I want him to call me on it.

Mr. SPRATT. Madam Chairman, I reclaim my time and say simply we will give the public and the Congress two baselines, the one the gentleman wants and the over which is a useful reminder of what it costs to keep defense where it was. That is all we are saying.

Mr. SABO. Madam Chairman, will the gentleman yield, and would the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KASICH] keep his chart up?

Mr. SPRATT. I yield to the chairman of the Committee on the Budget.

Mr. SABO. Madam Chairman, I say to the gentleman, "I'm just curious, my friend. How much bigger is that last bar than the first bar? About two, three times as big?"

Mr. KASICH. No, I would not think it is that big.

Mr. SABO. About twice the size, twice the size of the first bar?

Mr. KASICH. Does the gentleman mean this to this?

Mr. SABO. Yes, three times as big?

Mr. KASICH. Probably.

Mr. SABO. And what is the actual change in dollars the first year to the——

Mr. KASICH. Well, the——

Mr. SABO. About 6, 7 percent?

Mr. KASICH. Let me explain——

Mr. SABO. The gentleman is a master of deception with his charts.

Mr. KASICH. Let me explain to the gentleman. Let me answer.

I say, "Under your definition of this bill, this $221 million increase is called a $476 million cut——

Mr. SABO. I am not asking about my description. I am asking about the description the gentleman is showing to the House and to the public. A 6, 7 percent change in actual dollars is in the chart that looks like a 300 percent change.

Mr. KASICH. The gentleman's definition shows this going downwards. I mean that is the problem. Let us get on the same page.

Mr. SPRATT. Madam Chairman, I reclaim my time and yield 2 minutes to the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OBEY].

Mr. OBEY. Madam Chairman, I think the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Budget has just pointed out the incredible deception that we find in the chart just used by the gentleman from Ohio. The base number for the first bar was 3.1. The final bar number was 3.35. Now, if the gentleman can tell me how that small a change in dollars results in a doubling visually on that bar graph, I would suggest to him he needs a new pair of glasses. The numbers do not match the story the gentleman is trying to tell on the graph.

I simply want to say that this debate has nothing whatsoever to do with spending.

This issue has only to do with what kind of information is made available to the public and to the Congress.

The gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. SPRATT] simply says that we ought to provide comparisons to both the current funding baseline, which is not inflation adjusted, and also to the current policy baseline, which is inflation adjusted. Members of the public and Members of this House have a right to see the budget from both perspectives.

Now, the gentleman on this side of the aisle who just spoke says it has nothing to do with entitlements. He then proceeded to say he was sick of seeing budgets for defense adjusted on the basis of the inflated baseline.

The fact is, they are not. I have the defense appropriation report right here. The first column reads, Appropriated, 1994. It lists the dollar amount for military personnel. The next line lists the amount spent in 1985. Then it compares the costs not with an inflation-adjusted baseline, but with the regular noninflated baseline.

So if in fact the gentleman is correct on entitlements, and he is not, but if he were, then this amendment would have absolutely no effect on discretionary spending whatsoever.

I urge you to vote for the Spratt amendment. It is the only unbiased and honest amendment before the House.

Mr. PENNY. Madam Chairman, I was just curious to know if it would save time if we replay the earlier debate.

Madam Chairman, I yield 1 additional minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. KASICH].

Mr. KASICH. Madam Chairman, this is very illustrative of how we do it. This is how we reflect the increase in spending, and you are complaining about the chart. The way we ought to do is flip it over. This is the way you would have it read. See, that is the problem with this process.

Now, you know what is really curious? What is really curious is George Bush gives us in 1990 a one-half trillion dollar deficit reduction program. This President gives us a one-half trillion dollar deficit reduction program. If that is true, why has the national debt gone from $4.5 trillion to $6 trillion? If you can explain to me why we are cutting all this spending and having massive deficit reduction, why is it the deficit is going through the roof?

I will tell you why. We are not cutting spending, we are only counting cuts as slower increases in growth than what the bureaucrats in town want to do. I will tell why the people of this country do not want to budget it any more. They want to throw it out and do it with a straight line based on the year before. Madam Chairman, reject the Spratt amendment. Maintain the Penny-Stenholm proposal.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PENNY] has 10 minutes remaining, and the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. SPRATT] has 5 minutes remaining.

Mr. PENNY. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM].

Mr. STENHOLM. Madam Chairman, our debate is getting a little bit amusing now that we are replaying it for the third and fourth time.

You know, the important thing for us to remember, and I will start and conclude by this, is if you really want to contribute to the cynicism of the American people, vote for Spratt and then try to explain why you voted for Penny-Kasich-Stenholm and then voted immediately to overturn it. You cannot do it, folks.

Now, we can get into debate on the scales on charts. The fundamental here is it does not matter what the scale of the chart is. It is which direction the spending is going in and whether we are calling it an increase or decrease. That is all that is relevant.

In the last few days, the American Association of Retired People has used some very questionable judgment in some of the pronouncements concerning what is going on in this body and inside the beltway, and they are doing it again today. Because there is no relevance whatsoever to suggesting that either of these bills has anything to do with Social Security, Medicare, or any other program, bills that are both alike except for one major difference, and that is why we are debating it here today.

The gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OBEY] is correct. All of those who argue that we need all kinds of information are correct. What we are arguing is let us not confuse the American people with our policy business that we do in the Committee on the Budget. Let us tell the American people there is one budget baseline.

The people that drink coffee in the Dairy Queen in Stanford, TX, do not understand when we explain it to them any other way than this. If you get $100 this year and you get $99 next year, for whatever reason, that is a cut. If you get $101, that is an increase. That is the fundamental debate in this whole area of discussion today.

Madam Chairman, vote "no" on Spratt, particularly if you voted "yes" on Penny, because you cannot explain it any other way, unless you wish to continue the confusion on the American people of having dual baselines and all of the things that go with it.

Mr. PENNY. Madam Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Michigan [Mr. EHLERS].

Mr. EHLERS. Madam Chairman, I hope you do not mind if I try to inject a little rationality into the discussion, but I simply have to rise and defend my colleague from Ohio, who has been falsely accused of doctoring the chart to make it look favorable to his comments.

I would point out the little zig here. For those of you who are not mathematicians, I simply say this indicates a zero suppression. Anyone looking at a chart with a little zig there, should consider you are doing a comparative analysis, rather than an absolute one. The chart is perfectly accurate and illustrates that in fact the amount of spending has been increasing.

In the remainder of my time I simply want to comment on the previous speaker, Mr. STENHOLM's comments, and he is absolutely right. When the American automobile manufacturers publicize the price of their new car, and it has gone up $200, they are comparing it to the previous year's price. They do not advertise well, if you take the baseline adjusted for inflation, we are cutting the cost of our cars by $50 a year. Every press release that goes out, every statement made, every comparison by the buying public says in fact the price has gone up, and that is what is happening with our budget.

I urge that we reject the Spratt amendment.

Mr. PENNY. Madam Chairman, I yield 30 seconds to the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM].

Mr. STENHOLM. Madam Chairman, I want to thank my colleague for explaining not only to me, but also for the people of the Stanford Dairy Queen, what that signature means on that, because I think the whole world will know better now what we are talking about in the charts. I appreciate the edification.

Mr. PENNY. Madam Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from New Hampshire [Mr. SWETT].

Mr. SWETT. Madam Chairman, I thank my colleague from Minnesota for yielding.

I just want to add to, and I hope very briefly, the common sense that I am hearing out of people like the gentleman from Texas [Mr. STENHOLM] and the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PENNY] with regard to this amendment.

We have got to represent in our budgets the things that we are doing here in Washington in terms that most Americans can understand and believe. That is what we dealt with on Wednesday with the congressional accountability legislation, where we voted to bring Congress under every law that it passes for the rest of the country. That is what we have to do here when we talk budgets with small business people, with housewives, with those American citizens that live throughout the country and are trying to make sense out of these convoluted and complicated processes.

We are not changing the numbers. We are not misrepresenting anything. We are putting it all in terms that the average American can easily grasp. I think, quite honestly, it will make it easier for many of us here in Congress to understand as well. We have already had the zig explained. Now we have to make sure we get the zag out of there and come up with a budget we all understand. I urge support for the Penny amendment, and no vote on the Spratt amendment.

Mr. SPRATT. Madam Chairman, I yield 2 minutes to the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. SABO], the distinguished chairman of the Committee on the Budget.

Mr. SABO. Madam Chairman, I rise in support of the Spratt amendment. If you wanted the most complete, total information available using a variety of options, you support Spratt. You compare it to last year, you compare it to existing law, you compare it to the existence of inflation.

To the last speaker, I would only say when he plans for the future and having resources available to educate his kids, I hope he considers the long-term impact of inflation. Most Americans do. When Americans plan for their retirement, they consider the impact of inflation. We should too. When we look at what has historically happened in our country, we need to know how programs have changed, dollar for dollar. But we also need to know how it has been impacted by inflation.

When we measure the wage base of the American public and how, frankly, it has declined for millions of Americans over the last 20 years, we use inflation to understand that change and what is happening to millions of working Americans.

So, Madam Chairman, if we want to preserve the most options and understand what is happening with Federal budget policy, rather than fitting some little dogma, we vote for the Spratt amendment.

Mr. PENNY. Madam Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Ohio [Mr. HOKE].

Mr. HOKE. Madam Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding time to me.

I just wanted to add an anecdote from last summer that I thought might be of interest to the House.

Then Director of OMB, Leon Panetta, was in Cleveland for a roundtable conference. He is now, of course, the President's Chief of Staff. We were talking about the budget.

And I said we ought to start cutting with the Government, the Federal Government, ourselves. And Mr. Panetta said, "We did, we cut the pay of Federal workers."

And I looked at him and I said, "That is not true. We didn't cut the pay of Federal workers at all."

He said, "Yes, we have decreased the amount of the increase."

I said, "Mr. Panetta, when you say to the people in Parma, OH or in Rocky River that you have cut their pay, that means that if they made $34,000 this year, they will make $35,000 next year. That is a pay cut. It is not a decrease in an increase."

Mr. Panetta looked at me like I was from another planet. This is the former chairman of our distinguished Committee on the Budget.

That is the whole problem that we have got here in Washington with this baseline budgeting. I call it the dark alchemy of numbers.

Mr. PENNY. Madam Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from California [Mr. CUNNINGHAM].

Mr. CUNNINGHAM. Madam Chairman, I think when we go to explain how we are cutting spending to the American public, they do not understand because of the current system we are in.

I talked to my Mom. And I said, Mom, we are going to have a turkey for Thanksgiving, but next year the whole family is going to come so we need 10 turkeys. But came this year, the family called up and said, Mom, we cannot come. So we canceled the 10 turkeys and we stuck with the one turkey.

Under this system, we would tell the American public that we just cut 90 percent of the turkey expenditures. It is just not true.

We need to tell the American people instead of being able to confuse them, let them know exactly what they are spending.

As far as inflation, we could take care of inflation every year, because that happens yearly, not biyearly.

Mr. PENNY. Madam Chairman, I yield 1 minute to the gentlewoman from Connecticut [Mrs. JOHNSON].

Mrs. JOHNSON of Connecticut. Madam Chairman, not one person in this Nation sits at their kitchen table and plans for the next year, assuming they are going to get a salary increase equal to inflation.

Nobody does. It would be awfully nice if they could. Most of them do not get a salary increase equal to inflation.

Why does this Congress continue to believe it is all right for us to assume the budget is going to go up by inflation and only above inflation that we should tell the citizens of America that we increase spending? Get real.

This is about sunshine. This is about honesty. This is about accountability. And this is easy. The simple things in life matter. We will never ever cast a more important vote than we will cast today on this issue for deficit reduction. Because if we pass this, from now on the public will be able to see whether we increase spending 1 percent or 2 percent and we can say, yes, that is less than inflation.

They will be able to see what we are doing and judge us by our work.

Mr. PENNY. Madam Chairman, in urging a no vote on Spratt for those who voted yes on Penny, I yield my final minute and a half to the gentleman from California [Mr. COX].

Mr. COX. Madam Chairman, a recent survey of the American people asked them do you trust Congress to do the right thing most of the time. One percent said yes.

Why are the American people so cynical? It is because we can do things like call a spending increase a spending cut.

If we abolish baseline budgeting, we will not stop spending increases. We will simply require that when we increase spending, we say so. And we do not call it a cut.

Recently, a bipartisan coalition proposed reforms in 12 Federal programs. Overall the proposal allowed spending to grow by $18 billion. But using this baseline budgeting technique, the supporters of big spending were able to claim that the coalition wanted to cut spending these in programs by $11 billion.

Now we are going to compound the deficit of baseline budgeting by using a procedural trick called king of the hill. After pretending to say that we stopped baseline budgeting, we can come back and use king of the hill to undo it all.

The Penny-Kasich-Stenholm amendment passed by 247 to 171. It abolishes baseline budgeting. Now the Spratt amendment is offered to repeal it. Cynical Members of Congress who just minutes ago voted to abolish the accounting trick that says a spending increase is really a cut can now vote to put this accounting slight of hand back into the big spenders bag of tricks. This is double deception.

Thomas Jefferson once noted, "He who permits himself to tell a lie once finds it much easier to do it a second and a third time until at length it becomes habitual. The falsehood of the tongue leads to the falsehood of the heart and in time depraves all good dispositions."

Jefferson was right. The baseline is a lie and it eats away at the credibility of this Congress. The king-of-the-hill procedure is a deceit. We should abandon use of this practice at once.

I urge my colleagues to vote "no" on this double deception.

The CHAIRMAN. All time of the gentleman from Minnesota [Mr. PENNY] has expired.

Mr. SPRATT. Madam Chairman, I yield myself the balance of my time.

Madam Chairman, let me first make the argument that a vote for Spratt for the underlying base bill is completely consistent, even though you may have voted for the Stenholm-Penny-Kasich substitute. Why is that?

Undoubtedly Members of the House voted for Penny-Kasich-Stenholm because they wanted to have a frozen baseline. They wanted to have this year's spending baseline against which to measure increases in next year's budget. I understand that.

Indeed, we have, as a first step in this bill, accommodated that desire on the part of all Members and the desire of the public by having a current funding baseline authorized in this bill. It represents actual funding, what CBO calls a freeze.

There is also a need expressed by the fact that we use it continually for a current policy baseline both for us and for the public. And so if Members vote now for Spratt, we will simply say we want to have what we voted for before. We want the current funding baseline. But we would also like to have and have it displayed in the budget documents the current policy baseline.

Those who want to argue that an increase is an increase and a cut is a cut will have the current funding baseline against which to measure what is an increase and what is a cut. Those who would like to say, we are not keeping the Social Security Program adequately funded, we are not keeping Medicare adequately funded to maintain the benefits that are existing this year and next year, would have a current policy baseline as well.

We talk about entitlements but it applies to defense as well. If you want a current policy baseline so that you can say, do not fool yourself, a $1 billion increase in defense is not an increase, it is really a decrease. It will mean less pay, less O&M, less things that we essentially need for financial security. You need the current policy baseline for that purpose.

So this is a consistent vote. Members can vote to uphold what they voted for before because that is in this bill. But vote also for something useful, something analytically purposeful, the current policy baseline.

Vote for Spratt. Vote for good budget, full disclosure.

Mr. CONYERS. Madam Chairman, I rise in support of the legislation proposed by Representative SPRATT, a member of the Government Operations Committee, to reform our budget laws and provide more complete budgetary information to Congress.

H.R. 4907 reforms the baseline concept for the congressional budget and appropriations process. Currently, a program's baseline is adjusted each year so its spending level keeps pace with inflation and other factors. These adjustments make sure that Members of Congress, when asked to vote on budget and appropriations bills, are aware of the full cost of today's programs. H.R. 4907 would keep this baseline calculation and add a current funding baseline, which is not adjusted to reflect inflation.

In a series of Government Operations Committee hearings, several of our colleagues criticized the current baseline as providing for automatic spending increases and permitting Congress to call reductions in the size of the baseline increase a cut in spending.

These colleagues would prohibit inflation adjustments as Congress considers program funding levels. However, inflation is a very real cost for Federal programs.

The current baseline lets Members know that $1 of services this year is worth 97 cents next year because of inflation. Many Members want to know this information because it represents real reductions in programs, whether for kids or the Pentagon.

The new baseline estimate proposed in this bill would give Members a program's uninflated baseline. This should satisfy those Members who think the most important information is how much we spent last year.

Unlike the alternatives we will consider today, H.R. 4907 puts all of the information, with and without inflation, adjustments, before Members of Congress. We should not put new restrictions on the information Members of Congress can, and cannot, consider when making spending decisions. We cannot do our job if we have only half of the needed information.

If we are to impose spending cuts, we need to know what the full impact of these decisions will be. We cannot do this if we ignore the current costs of today's problems by focusing only on last year's costs. Under such a formula, Congress would always be behind the curve in addressing today's urgent priorities.

Madam Chairman, I urge adoption of H.R. 4907. The legislation will present all of the information Members of Congress need to fully evaluate spending decisions. I urge opposition to amendments which require Congress to turn a blind eye to today's needs. Thank you, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. All time has expired.

The question is on the amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. SPRATT].

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. Pickle for, with Mr. Barton against.

Mr. Vento for, with Mr. Thomas of Wyoming against.

Ms. FURSE changed her vote from "aye" to "no."

Mr. NEAL of Massachusetts changes his vote from "no" to "aye."

So the amendment in the nature of a substitute was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. GEJDENSON. Madam Chairman, today I was absent for rollcall votes Nos. 395 and 396. Had I been present, I would have voted against the Penny amendment, No. 395, and in favor of the Spratt amendment, No. 396.

PERSONAL EXPLANATION

Mr. BALLENGER. Mr. Speaker, unfortunately I missed rollcall vote 396 on the Spratt amendment to H.R. 4907, the Full Budget Disclosure Act of 1994. Had I been present, I would have voted "no."

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute; as amended, was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly, the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. McDERMOTT) having assumed the chair, Mrs. SCHROEDER, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 4907) to reform the concept of baseline budgeting, pursuant to House Resolution 512, she reported the bill back to the House with an amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on the amendment to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute adopted by the Committee of the Whole? If not, the question is on the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended, was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. COLEMAN. Mr. Speaker, on that I demand the yeas and nays.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Was the gentleman on his feet?

Mr. COLEMAN. The gentleman was on his feet.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will recognize that the gentleman was on his feet. The Chair will count for the yeas and nays. Those favoring the yeas and nays will rise and be counted. Members may be seated.

The Chair will count the House. In a House of obviously more than 220 Members, the Chair counts 45 in favor of a vote by the yeas and nays. Therefore, an insufficient number has arisen.

The yeas and nays were refused.

So the bill was passed.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. DERRICK. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks, and include extraneous material, on H.R. 4907, the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. McDERMOTT). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from South Carolina?

There was no objection.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

(Mr. GINGRICH asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. GINGRICH. Mr. Speaker, I ask to proceed for the purpose of receiving the schedule from the majority leader, and I yield to my good friend, the gentleman from Missouri, for that purpose.

Mr. GEPHARDT. I thank the gentleman for yielding. There will not be further votes today.

We will try to not have votes until 5 o'clock on Tuesday afternoon on the suspension bills.

On Wednesday, August 17, and the balance of the week, the House will meet at 10 a.m. on Wednesday, Thursday, and possibly Friday. We will have H.R. 4906, Emergency Spending Control Act of 1994, subject to a rule; H.R. 3433, providing for the management of the Presidio, subject to a rule; H.R. 4908, hydrogen and fusion research and development programs authorization, subject to a rule; S. 2182, Department of Defense authorization conference report, subject to a rule; H.R. 3355, the Omnibus Crime Control Act conference report again, subject to a rule; H.R. 3800, Superfund Reform Act of 1994, subject to a rule; S. 349, Lobbying Disclosure Act of 1994 conference report; and S. 3, Congressional Spending Limit and Election Reform Act of 1994, conference report, subject to a rule.

There are other conference reports that may be brought up at any time.

I would say to the gentleman, we are continuing on both sides with different groups of Members working with the Congressional Budget Office on scoring the various health bills. It is our intention to try to get to health care if and when the Congressional Budget Office is finished that material. As the Members know, this is an interactive process and there is no way to predict, unfortunately, when that will be finished and we will just have to keep Members apprised on a day-by-day basis of where we are on that.

Mr. GINGRICH. If I could ask the majority leader, first I want to reconfirm for Members if they are back by 5 o'clock on Tuesday, that is when votes, in your judgment, will probably begin, for Members in terms of arranging plans, is that correct?

Mr. GEPHARDT. The gentleman is correct.

Mr. GINGRICH. I want to walk through the health thing if I could for just a second. As I understand it, this is an extraordinary complex business and we have talked about it at length together, making sure that the Congressional Budget Office scoring is accurate, which takes time, and at the same time having an opportunity to interact with the authors of each bill because, as the gentleman knows, as we go through each part of this process it changes the whole nature of what we are doing.

I have two questions I guess. One is should Members for the present time plan on the week after next being here, or does the gentleman have any notion at this stage what plans they should make for the week after next?

Mr. GEPHARDT. We will have to advise them again next week on a day-by-day basis as we see where we are with the Congressional Budget Office work. As the gentleman knows, we have procedures without a recess motion that could be used to keep the House in session as long as the Senate is in session, and we anticipate it will be. We can go 3 days to 3 days under our rules and allow Members to not be here for votes, but keep the House in session and continue to work to see if we can get a solution to the CBO analysis problem.

Mr. GINGRICH. My second question is on the health side we had talked at one point about a very orderly procedure, which I found very attractive to begin the debate in an orderly way and have plenty of general debate time because of the intensity and scale of this issue, allow all of the various proponents of different bills to have a chance, and then move into a process with a second rule looking at any amendments, and looking at voting on the various alternatives.

In your judgment, the gentleman and the Democratic leadership yet decided whether we should wait until we are certain of the whole scoring process before we begin the initial general debate, or whether we should try to begin that late next week, or again, just for the purpose of those Members on both sides who may want to prepare remarks on an issue of this importance, do you have any thoughts at this stage on how we might proceed?

Mr. GEPHARDT. I do not want to stop anyone from writing a speech. But I do think that we are going to have hearings next week in the Rules Committee. We will continue on the bills. I think Members can anticipate that they may want to be involved in testifying there.

But I do think that it is hard to have meaningful debate on these bills until we know exactly what their provisions are, and again, the provisions may have to change as a result of the scoring necessities.

Mr. GINGRICH. I would rather have us, as you know, go in an orderly manner, so you are not going to get any complaints on our side if we allow the scoring and the drafting and the technicalities to be worked out prior to beginning debate.

Because I think on an issue that affects the whole country on this scale, that is the right way to do it. So you will not hear any carping or complaining.

One other item, I noticed you mentioned here H.R. 3355, the Omnibus Crime Control Act. I would just like to comment and report to the House that a few minutes ago Senator DOLE and I along with four members of the conference sent a letter to the President on Air Force One offering to meet early this evening and discuss the possibility of bipartisan help in reporting the conference and that the 11 Republicans who voted "yes" yesterday on the rule have also sent a letter to the President indicating a desire to work with him in a bipartisan manner to get this bill rewritten.

So I just want Members to know we are prepared, if necessary, to work starting this weekend in a bipartisan manner to reopen the conference and to try to get to a passable crime bill as early as possible.

Mr. GEPHARDT. We have been meeting with a lot of our Members today to talk about the crime bill. We are trying to work toward a solution.

ADJOURNMENT FROM TODAY, FRIDAY, AUGUST 12, 1994, TO TUESDAY, AUGUST 16, 1994

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today, it adjourn to meet at 10:30 a.m. on Tuesday, August 16, 1994.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. McDERMOTT). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

DISPENSING WITH CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS ON WEDNESDAY NEXT

Mr. GEPHARDT. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order under the Calendar Wednesday rule be dispensed with on Wednesday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Missouri?

There was no objection.

NORTHERN GREAT PLAINS RURAL DEVELOPMENT ACT

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Agriculture be discharged from further consideration of the Senate bill (S. 2099) to establish the Northern Great Plains Rural Development Commission, and for other purposes, and ask for its immediate consideration in the House.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I shall not object, but under my reservation, I yield to the distinguished chairman to explain the purpose of the bill.

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, the Northern Great Plains Rural Development Act would establish a commission to study and make recommendations regarding the economic development needs of the rural northern Great Plains States of South Dakota, North Dakota, Nebraska, Minnesota, and Iowa.

Mr. Speaker, S. 2099, the Northern Great Plains Rural Development Act, would establish a commission to study and make recommendations regarding the economic development needs of the rural northern Great Plains States of South Dakota, North Dakota, Nebraska, Minnesota and Iowa.

The legislation seeks to achieve this objective by seeking and encouraging the participation and input of a broad range of interested citizens in these States. The Commission proposed in the bill would be comprised of 10 members. Five are to be selected by the States with each Governor appointing one member, and five are to be selected by the Federal Government with the Secretary of Agriculture appointing one member from each of the five States.

The legislation requires the Commission to hold hearings, conduct studies, and determine the appropriate strategies for promoting development in the rural areas of the Northern Great Plains. The bill also states that the Commission will terminate in not less than 2 years.

Mr. Speaker, S. 2099 will provide a mechanism for State and local leaders, working with USDA, to develop a long-term, cooperative plan that enables the rural areas of these States to build on their shared and unique strengths and to overcome their common problems.

I commend the gentleman from South Dakota [Mr. JOHNSON] for introducing in the House the companion bill to this measure. The bill has support from lawmakers in all of the States included in the bill.

The Committee on Agriculture has approved this legislation by voice vote. And I urge my colleagues in the House to support its passage.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, this legislation passed the Senate by unanimous consent on June 22 and was routinely reported by the Committee on Agriculture by voice vote; it is identical to a companion House bill, H.R. 4388. There was no dissent on the Republican side concerning this legislation in Committee.

The bill sets up a rural development commission to study the economic problems of the northern Great Plains, specifically the States of South and North Dakota, Nebraska, Minnesota, and Iowa. It requires input from a wide array of interest groups, including local, regional and State governments, nonprofit organizations, agricultural and business groups in the area. They are required to come up with a strategy to address the economic needs of the region, which are similar to the problems of our agricultural economy nationally.

This legislation is similar to the Mississippi Delta Commission that was authorized in 1988, but the authorization expires following the Commission's report or within 2 years of enactment. It is my understanding funds have been provided in the Senate agricultural appropriations bill. The bill has broad support among the Members representing congressional districts in the regions and unanimous support from those States in the other body.

I would urge adoption of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill, as follows:

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 2927, the Plant Variety Protection Act Amendments of 1994, would conform current U.S. law with the articles of the International Convention for the Protection of New Varieties of Plants of 1991, otherwise referred to as the UPOV Convention.

The primary purpose of this legislation is to strengthen the intellectual property rights of plant breeders and accommodate recent advancements in plant science knowledge and technology.

Since 1970, the Plant Variety Protection Act [PVPA] has provided for the issuance of certificates of plant variety protection. These certificates assure the the developers of novel varieties of sexually reproduced plants have the exclusive rights to sell, reproduce, import, or export such varieties, or use them in the reproduction of hybrids or different varieties.

In order to provide our plant breeders protection in other countries as well, the United States became a member of the UPOV Convention in 1981. The UPOV currently has 25 member countries and provides for uniform practices in the construction and administration of plant variety protection laws in the various member states.

After several years of negotiations, the UPOV Convention was significantly revised in 1991 to provide improved protection for innovative plant varieties. The United States is a signatory to the 1991 agreement. The bill before the House today would conform the current Plant Variety Protection Act to the 1991 UPOV agreement.

Briefly, the major provision of H.R. 2927 would: Prohibit the unauthorized sale of seed by farmers to others; establish new definitions; use the date of filing for protection as the basis for determining eligibility for protection; require that protected varieties be sold by variety name only—with a narrow exemption provided for certain turf and forage grass seeds; extend protection to first generation hybrids; extend the period of protection from 18 to 20 years for most crops and from 18 to 25 years for trees and vines.

Mr. Speaker, each of these changes are needed to conform U.S. law to the 1991 act of the UPOV Convention. In addition, and at the request of the potato industry, a provision is made for including tuber-propagated varieties within the scope of the PVPA.

Mr. Speaker, the development of new plant varieties is time-consuming and costly.

Many years must be spent in the development of a single new variety, with no guarantee of its success or profit. By granting an owner of a variety the right to prevent unauthorized sale of seed of that variety, this legislation will provide that owner with the opportunity to recover the costs of development.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 2927 will encourage and protect the investment in research into new varieties necessary to respond to the changing needs of American agriculture. I urge my colleagues in the House to support passage of this legislation.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I thank the gentleman for his explanation.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 2927, the Plant Variety Protection Act Amendments of 1993. This legislation is an important step towards fulfilling the obligation incurred by the United States as a result of our participation in the International Convention for the Protection of New Varieties.

The development of new plant varieties is important to production agriculture. Not only to increase production of agricultural commodities, but to develop other qualities as well, such as pest and disease resistance. However, the development of these new varieties is time-consuming and costly.

The underlying concept of the International Convention for the Protection of New Varieties and this enabling legislation is simple enough. It maintains that by granting the owner of a variety the right to prevent unauthorized use or sale of the seed of that variety, the owner will have the opportunity to recover the cost of development and profit from their work. This profit then encourages the production of new varieties.

New varieties enable the Nation's farmers to respond to changing climatic conditions, reduce threats from damaging pests, and increase efficiencies that benefit both their own bottom line and the budgets of consumers. This legislation will play an important role in ensuring that Americans continue to enjoy the highest quality food and fiber at the lowest prices.

Again, Mr. Speaker, I underscore my support for this legislation and urge its adoption.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

H.R. 2927

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; REFERENCES.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the "Plant Variety Protection Act Amendments of 1993".

(b) REFERENCES TO PLANT VARIETY PROTECTION ACT.—Except as otherwise expressly provided, whenever in this Act an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of the Plant Variety Protection Act (7 U.S.C. 2321 et seq.).

SEC. 2. DEFINITIONS AND RULES OF CONSTRUCTION.

"(a) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this Act:

"(1) BASIC SEED.—The term 'basic seed' means the seed planted to produce certified or commercial seed.

"(2) BREEDER.—The term 'breeder' means the person who directs the final breeding creating a variety or who discovers and develops a variety. If the actions are conducted by an agent on behalf of a principal, the principal, rather than the agent, shall be considered the breeder. The term does not include a person who redevelops or rediscovers a variety the existence of which is publicly known or a matter of common knowledge.

"(3) ESSENTIALLY DERIVED VARIETY.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'essentially derived variety' means a variety that—

"(i) is predominantly derived from another variety (referred to in this paragraph as the 'initial variety') or from a variety that is predominantly derived from the initial variety, while retaining the expression of the essential characteristics that result from the genotype or combination of genotypes of the initial variety;

"(ii) is clearly distinguishable from the initial variety; and

"(iii) except for differences that result from the act of derivation, conforms to the initial variety in the expression of the essential characteristics that result from the genotype or combination of genotypes of the initial variety.

"(B) METHODS.—An essentially derived variety may be obtained by the selection of a natural or induced mutant or of a somaclonal variant, the selection of a variant individual from plants of the initial variety, backcrossing, transformation by genetic engineering, or other method.

"(4) KIND.—The term 'kind' means one or more related species or subspecies singly or collectively known by one common name, such as soybean, flax, or radish.

"(5) SEXUALLY REPRODUCED.—The term 'sexually reproduced' includes any production of a variety by seed.

"(6) UNITED STATES.—The terms 'United States' and 'this country' mean the United States, territories and possessions of the United States, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.

"(7) VARIETY.—The term 'variety' means a plant grouping within a single botanical taxon of the lowest known rank, that, without regard to whether the conditions for plant variety protection are fully met, can be defined by the expression of the characteristics resulting from a given genotype or combination of genotypes, distinguished from any other plant grouping by the expression of at least one characteristic and considered as a unit with regard to the suitability of the plant grouping for being propagated unchanged. A variety may be represented by seed, transplants, plants, and other matter.

"(1) SALE OR DISPOSITION FOR NONREPRODUCTIVE PURPOSES.—The sale or disposition, for other than reproductive purposes, of harvested material produced as a result of experimentation or testing of a variety to ascertain the characteristics of the variety, or as a by-product of increasing a variety, shall not be considered to be a sale or disposition for purposes of exploitation of the variety.

"(2) SALE OR DISPOSITION FOR REPRODUCTIVE PURPOSES.—The sale or disposition of a variety for reproductive purposes shall not be considered to be a sale or disposition for the purposes of exploitation of the variety if the sale or disposition is done as an integral part of a program of experimentation or testing to ascertain the characteristics of the variety, or to increase the variety on behalf of the breeder or the successor in interest of the breeder.

"(3) SALE OR DISPOSITION OF HYBRID SEED.—The sale or disposition of hybrid seed shall be considered to be a sale or disposition of harvested material of the varieties from which the seed was produced.

"(4) APPLICATION FOR PROTECTION OR ENTERING INTO A REGISTER OF VARIETIES.—The filing of an application for the protection or for the entering of a variety in an official register of varieties, in any country, shall be considered to render the variety a matter of common knowledge from the date of the application, if the application leads to the granting of protection or to the entering of the variety in the official register of varieties, as the case may be.

"(5) DISTINCTNESS.—The distinctness of one variety from another may be based on one or more identifiable morphological, physiological, or other characteristics (including any characteristics evidenced by processing or product characteristics, such as milling and baking characteristics in the case of wheat) with respect to which a difference in genealogy may contribute evidence.

"(6) PUBLICLY KNOWN VARIETIES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—A variety that is adequately described by a publication reasonably considered to be a part of the public technical knowledge in the United States shall be considered to be publicly known and a matter of common knowledge.

"(B) DESCRIPTION.—A description that meets the requirements of subparagraph (A) shall include a disclosure of the principal characteristics by which a variety is distinguished.

S. 1406

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE; REFERENCES.

(a) SHORT TITLE.—This Act may be cited as the "Plant Variety Protection Act Amendments of 1994".

(b) REFERENCES TO PLANT VARIETY PROTECTION ACT.—Except as otherwise expressly provided, whenever in this Act an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of the Plant Variety Protection Act (7 U.S.C. 2321 et seq.).

SEC. 2. DEFINITIONS AND RULES OF CONSTRUCTION.

Section 41 (7 U.S.C. 2401) is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 41. DEFINITIONS AND RULES OF CONSTRUCTION.

"(a) DEFINITIONS.—As used in this Act:

"(1) BASIC SEED.—The term 'basic seed' means the seed planted to produce certified or commercial seed.

"(2) BREEDER.—The term 'breeder' means the person who directs the final breeding creating a variety or who discovers and develops a variety. If the actions are conducted by an agent on behalf of a principal, the principal, rather than the agent, shall be considered the breeder. The term does not include a person who redevelops or rediscovers a variety the existence of which is publicly known or a matter of common knowledge.

"(3) ESSENTIALLY DERIVED VARIETY.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The term 'essentially derived variety' means a variety that—

"(i) is predominantly derived from another variety (referred to in this paragraph as the 'initial variety') or from a variety that is predominantly derived from the initial variety, while retaining the expression of the essential characteristics that result from the genotype or combination of genotypes of the initial variety;

"(ii) is clearly distinguishable from the initial variety; and

"(iii) except for differences that result from the act of derivation, conforms to the initial variety in the expression of the essential characteristics that result from the genotype or combination of genotypes of the initial variety.

"(B) METHODS.—An essentially derived variety may be obtained by the selection of a natural or induced mutant or of a somaclonal variant, the selection of a variant individual from plants of the initial variety, backcrossing, transformation by genetic engineering, or other method.

"(4) KIND.—The term 'kind' means one or more related species or subspecies singly or collectively known by one common name, such as soybean, flax, or radish.

"(5) SEED.—The term 'seed', with respect to a tuber propagated variety, means the tuber or the part of the tuber used for propagation.

"(6) SEXUALLY REPRODUCED.—The term 'sexually reproduced' includes any production of a variety by seed, but does not include the production of a variety by tuber propagation.

"(7) TUBER PROPAGATED.—The term 'tuber propagated' means propagated by a tuber or a part of a tuber.

"(8) UNITED STATES.—The terms 'United States' and 'this country' mean the United States, territories and possessions of the United States, and the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico.

"(9) VARIETY.—The term 'variety' means a plant grouping within a single botanical taxon of the lowest known rank, that, without regard to whether the conditions for plant variety protection are fully met, can be defined by the expression of the characteristics resulting from a given genotype or combination of genotypes, distinguished from any other plant grouping by the expression of at least one characteristic and considered as a unit with regard to the suitability of the plant grouping for being propagated unchanged. A variety may be represented by seed, transplants, plants, tubers, tissue culture plantlets, and other matter.

"(b) RULES OF CONSTRUCTION.—For the purposes of this Act:

"(1) SALE OR DISPOSITION FOR NONREPRODUCTIVE PURPOSES.—The sale or disposition, for other than reproductive purposes, of harvested material produced as a result of experimentation or testing of a variety to ascertain the characteristics of the variety, or as a by-product of increasing a variety, shall not be considered to be a sale or disposition for purposes of exploitation of the variety.

"(2) SALE OR DISPOSITION FOR REPRODUCTIVE PURPOSES.—The sale or disposition of a variety for reproductive purposes shall not be considered to be a sale or disposition for the purposes of exploitation of the variety if the sale or disposition is done as an integral part of a program of experimentation or testing to ascertain the characteristics of the variety, or to increase the variety on behalf of the breeder or the successor in interest of the breeder.

"(3) SALE OR DISPOSITION OF HYBRID SEED.—The sale or disposition of hybrid seed shall be considered to be a sale or disposition of harvested material of the varieties from which the seed was produced.

"(4) APPLICATION FOR PROTECTION OR ENTERING INTO A REGISTER OF VARIETIES.—The filing of an application for the protection or for the entering of a variety in an official register of varieties, in any country, shall be considered to render the variety a matter of common knowledge from the date of the application, if the application leads to the granting of protection or to the entering of the variety in the official register of varieties, as the case may be.

"(5) DISTINCTNESS.—The distinctness of one variety from another may be based on one or more identifiable morphological, physiological, or other characteristics (including any characteristics evidenced by processing or product characteristics, such as milling and baking characteristics in the case of wheat) with respect to which a difference in genealogy may contribute evidence.

"(6) PUBLICLY KNOWN VARIETIES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—A variety that is adequately described by a publication reasonably considered to be a part of the public technical knowledge in the United States shall be considered to be publicly known and a matter of common knowledge.

"(B) DESCRIPTION.—A description that meets the requirements of subparagraph (A) shall include a disclosure of the principal characteristics by which a variety is distinguished.

"(C) OTHER MEANS.—A variety may become publicly known and a matter of common knowledge by other means.".

SEC. 3. RIGHT TO PLANT VARIETY PROTECTION; PLANT VARIETIES PROTECTABLE.

Section 42 (7 U.S.C. 2402) is amended to read as follows:

"(1) new, in the sense that, on the date of filing of the application for plant variety protection, propagating or harvested material of the variety has not been sold or otherwise disposed of to other persons, by or with the consent of the breeder, or the successor in interest of the breeder, for purposes of exploitation of the variety—

"(3) uniform, in the sense that any variations are describable, predictable, and commercially acceptable; and

"(4) stable, in the sense that the variety, when reproduced, will remain unchanged with regard to the essential and distinctive characteristics of the variety with a reasonable degree of reliability commensurate with that of varieties of the same category in which the same breeding method is employed.

"(b) MULTIPLE APPLICANTS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—If 2 or more applicants submit applications on the same effective filing date for varieties that cannot be clearly distinguished from one another, but that fulfill all other requirements of subsection (a), the applicant who first complies with all requirements of this Act shall be entitled to a certificate of plant variety protection, to the exclusion of any other applicant.

"(2) REQUIREMENTS COMPLETED ON SAME DATE.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—Except as provided in subparagraph (B), if 2 or more applicants comply with all requirements for protection on the same date, a certificate shall be issued for each variety.

"(B) VARIETIES INDISTINGUISHABLE.—If the varieties that are the subject of the applications cannot be distinguished in any manner, a single certificate shall be issued jointly to the applicants.".

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. DE LA GARZA

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. DE LA GARZA moves to strike all after the enacting clause of S. 1406 and insert in lieu thereof the text of H.R. 2927, as passed by the House.

The motion was agreed to.

The Senate bill was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A similar House bill (H.R. 2927) was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the two bills just considered and passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

NATIONAL POW/MIA RECOGNITION DAY

Mr. WYNN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the Senate joint resolution (S.J. Res. 196) designating September 16, 1994, as "National POW/MIA Recognition Day" and authorizing display of the National League of Families POW/MIA flag, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do not object, but I would simply like to inform the House the minority has no objection to the legislation now being considered, and, Mr. Speaker, as the chief sponsor of House Joint Resolution 360, I rise in support of this legislation.

Mr. Speaker, I thank the distinguished chairman of the Post Office and Civil Service Committee, the gentleman from Missouri [Mr. CLAY], and our good ranking minority member, the gentleman from Indiana [Mr. MYERS], for bringing this important resolution to the floor today. Their support for veterans and Americans in uniform is well known and appreciated by this Member.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in full support of Senate Joint Resolution 196, designating September 16, 1994, as "National POW/MIA Recognition Day" and authorizing display of the National League of Families POW/MIA flag—a day when our veteran posts, our schools, our libraries, and our mass media can remind all Americans of our courageous servicemen whose fates are still undetermined from the Vietnam war.

In 1992, candidate Clinton told the POW/MIA family groups and veteran organizations that he would never lift the trade embargo against the Communist government of Vietnam until the fate of thousands of POW's and MIA's from the Vietnam war was resolved. President Clinton, against the advice of the American Legion, the National League of Families, the National Alliance of Families, and other veterans and family organizations lifted the trade embargo. His rationale for doing so was that the Vietnamese Government was cooperating with our efforts to account for our men.

Regrettably, besides some access to old crash sites that has been on many occasions, fully investigated by Vietnamese, Soviet, and Chinese personnel years ago, the Vietnamese Government has done virtually nothing to account for hundreds of Americans they have information on. The Government of Vietnam continues to withhold from our investigators access to prison records and military reports that were written at the time of the shoot downs and captures. The meticulous Communist recordkeepers tell us that the books were eaten by worms, damaged by weather, or hold sensitive national security information.

Meanwhile, our State Department continues to move full speed ahead, with its plans to open a Liaison Office that looks more and more like an Embassy as official relations between our Nation and the Socialist Republic of Vietnam appears to be a foregone conclusion.

Despite my reservations, it is my sincere hope that the administration's normalization of trade and relations with Vietnam eventually pays dividends and that next year there will not be a need for this resolution.

Accordingly, I urge my colleagues to vote for Senate Joint Resolution 196.

Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I yield to the gentleman from California [Mr. ROHRABACHER].

Mr. ROHRABACHER. Mr. Speaker, I rise in strong support of House Joint Resolution 369.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to congratulate the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN] on the courageous effort he has made on this issue over the years. It has just been something he has not let go of, and he has been tremendously responsible.

Mr. Speaker, I would again like to congratulate the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN] who for many, many years has kept the faith not only with the American people but with those men and women who went to Vietnam to protect the interests of the United States of America and to fight for freedom.

Mr. Speaker, when we gave our word to them, the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN] did not forget and has kept the faith with them over the years.

Mr. Speaker, I am very proud to be with the gentleman here today to declare that September 16 should be a day in memory of our MIA/POW's. This issue has, unlike the exemplary job Mr. GILMAN has done, has been a disgrace on the part of so many American officials and so many elected officials as well.

I remember when I was a young reporter shortly after the MIA/POW's were supposedly all returned, I was a young reporter and interviewed Richard Nixon in Los Angeles. I will never forget that interview because I asked him whether or not he was certain all of our MIA/POW's had been returned from Vietnam. And he gave me a statement to that effect.

However, after the interview, I thought to myself the President did not give me any reason to believe that all of the MIA/POW's were returned except that he was satisfied. It seemed to me if he was satisfied and that was not just a public statement, he would have given me reasons to believe that.

So I walked away from that interview so many years ago, 20 years ago now, saying, "You know, I don't think he was telling me the truth. I think he thinks there may still be some MIA/POW's in Vietnam." The question we have to ask ourselves, at that time why would the Vietnamese have ever given up all of their leverage on the United States of America in order to give back all of those people who had been there bombing them and participating in the war against them?

At that time the war was still going on in Cambodia, war was still going on in Laos, in fact, a war was still going on it South Vietnam. There was every reason to question whether or not the Vietnamese gave back all of those POW/MIA's at that time.

We have heard over and over and over again these years that the Communist regime in Hanoi has been cooperative. Well it just ain't so.

The history of our dealings with Hanoi in terms of our MIA/POW record is a record of deceit, foot-dragging, and manipulation. It is a history of we ourselves bending over backward to give the very best interpretation of all of Hanoi's actions. It is a history of a mindset on the part of American officials to debunk the entire MIA/POW issue, especially if there are any live-sighting reports about possible POW/MIA's still in the hands of the Communists.

Now, are there still live POW's, especially after all of these years? I happen to believe it is likely that they kept some Americans after claiming they returned them all. That does not mean these men would still be alive today. I do not know if they are or not, and I am not saying they were kept. What I do know is that the American people have been lied to on this issue over and over again.

What I do know is Hanoi has not been cooperating as we have been told on this issue.

Mr. Speaker, less than a year ago, I was up on the Cambodian-Vietnamese border with our American POW teams out there in the jungle, trying to find, desperately working under horrible conditions, having to cut landing pads out of the jungle in order to try to find a hospital where some of our MIA/POW's were kept near the end of the war.

The trouble is Hanoi could tell us the location of this hospital, which was a major facility during the war, simply by having any one of the thousands of North Vietnamese who were stationed at that hospital go to the scene and help our people locating it.

But instead our teams have been put through a grueling practice over and over again, trying their hardest, working long hours to find even the minuscule bit of information.

One of our own colleagues, PETE PETERSON of Florida, was held for 6 years as a prisoner of war. On the way over to Vietnam I asked PETE if he has been a prisoner of war, designated as a prisoner of war the entire time he was held captive. He told me, "no," in fact during the first 3 years of his captivity he was labeled as an MIA, meaning even his family did not know that he was being held captive by the North Vietnamese.

During that time that he was kept there, and I think this is important, Mr. PETERSON was kept totally separate from all other Americans. No one knew that he was being held captive. In fact, had he been kept instead of declared a POW, we would not have known he would have been there at all. It is possible other Americans were held in the same way. I am not saying that is absolutely the case, but that it is worth putting pressure on the Vietnamese instead of bending over backward giving them the benefit of the doubt.

When I was with them negotiating this issue, they told me that record that PETE PETERSON—the prison in which he was held those 6 years, were not available to us. Now, those records could have disclosed to us whether or not there were other prisoners in this status listed as MIA and being part of the prison population. In fact, we have not been given the record of any of those prisons.

That to me indicates the Vietnamese have been deceptive. We do not need to bend over backward in the POW/MIA issue, to normalize relations, rush in with a trading relationship with people who are treating us with that type of arrogance.

I would say during this time period the one hope that any people have of actually coming to the truth, to finding out what happened in there in Southeast Asia to our MIA/POW's, is to make sure we as American citizens keep the pressure up on our own Government and on Hanoi. That is why this resolution today is so important. That is why on September 16, I hope that all Americans will fly their MIA/POW flags at their local libraries and people will come forward and give radio interviews and talk to other Americans and others about the issue of MIA/POW's. We should never forget this war in Vietnam.

We should never forget the lessons we learned there. There are a lot lessons to be learned. But most importantly, never forget the men and women who marched off. They placed their lives on the line for us, and we should make sure they are never forgotten, because we are sending a message to our current defenders that we will always be behind them and will never ever leave them behind.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I thank the gentleman from California [Mr. ROHRABACHER] for his very strong supportive statements in support of the resolution.

Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I am pleased to yield to a longtime proponent of our need to explore and to get a full resolution of our MIA/POW issue, the gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN].

Mr. DORNAN. I thank the gentleman from New York, the stalwart colleague from New York, who has been a leader on this issue for the better part of a quarter of a century.

Mr. Speaker, I am going to be uncharacteristically brief on this issue because our colleague and whip and one of our leaders, deputy whip, Mr. WALKER, has a privileged motion and I want to stay to hear that.

There is not anything I can say to add to the perfect remarks of the gentleman from California [Mr. ROHRABACHER] and to the perfect remarks of the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN] on this issue.

□ 1430

Last week, I was going to make a speech on this because it was the 30th anniversary of the shootdown of our friend, Ev Alvarez, on August 5, 1964. What we did not know until 9 years later, Ev was to turn out not to be our longest-held prisoner. An Army Green Beret, Maj. Floyd Thompson, was taken prisoner March 26, 1964, served 1 week less than 9 years. His wife waited for him. MIA for all those years. So, this was the better part of a decade, this agony.

What I will do is just associate myself with the remarks, with the perfect remarks, of the gentleman from California [Mr. ROHRABACHER].

Mr. Speaker, I am going to put in the RECORD what the gentleman from New York [Mr. GILMAN] and I have agreed is the outstanding article by our friend, Dr. Frank Gaffney, last week on the warehoused remains of our heroes and why the Vietnamese can still not be trusted on this issue, and I would call my colleagues and the Nation's attention, through C-SPAN, to this month's Reader's Digest on the 30th anniversary of Ev Alvarez' shootdown. There is a superb article of how this man's faith, his Christian faith, his Catholic faith, which I will speak about in my special order tonight, how that sustained him through the darkest months when he was the only prisoner. They never let him know that they had Floyd Thompson, never saw him during all those 9 years.

I thank the gentleman for letting me speak, and I support, of course, Senate Joint Resolution 196.

Mr. Speaker, here is the superb article by Frank Gaffney, it is both heartbreaking and enraging to true patriots.

The article follows:

[From the Washington Times, July 26, 1994]

SMOKING GUN IN MIA COVERUP?

(By Frank Gaffney, Jr.)

One would think that, if a picture is worth a thousand words, 2,000 photos recently displayed at a national convention in Crystal City should be worth 2 million words. In fact, these pictures should translate into much more than a voluminous book's worth of wordage. They should clear the way for a final, honest accounting of what happened to the hundreds of men left behind at the end of the Vietnam war.

The photographs, which were presented publicly for the first time at the annual Washington meeting of the National Alliance of POW-MIA Families, were taken more than 20 years ago by the North Vietnamese army and news agency. They show American prisoners of war, aircraft crash sites and pilot identification cards.

Some of the subjects are among those prisoners who returned at the end of the war. But many others are servicemen—photographed alive or dead—who are still officially considered "unaccounted for."

Incredibly, these materials were secretly withheld from the public—including family members of some of those servicemen appearing in these photographs who claim the U.S. government had not previously informed them about the existence of these photos, even though the Defense Department now acknowledges having them for more than two years. The National Alliance obtained these formerly "TOP SECRET" photos from a former agent of the Defense Intelligence Agency.

The explanation for this stunning withholding of information relevant to the POW-MIA issue may lie in the fact that these photos represent damning new evidence of the extent to which the American and Vietnamese governments have covered up critical information on missing U.S. servicemen. Among other things, they document the great lengths to which North Vietnam went to document its inventory of captured or dead American prisoners and their equipment—to the point of labeling and warehousing prisoners' uniforms, flight helmets and aircraft identification numbers.

In addition, hundreds of pilot identification cards—including those of men still listed as missing—are shown in pristine condition. There are also photos depicting Vietnamese searching through crash sites together with Soviet bloc advisers, indicating there is much more information in Hanoi and Moscow that can and must be made public.

Importantly, these photos also appear to put to rest several, long-disputed issues:

Some American servicemen officially listed as missing in the Vietnam conflict were captured alive. Consequently, it is no longer possible to accept Hanoi's excuses—or those of its apologists—to the effect that it has no knowledge of the fate of these individuals.

American servicemen listed as missing or deceased "with body unrecoverable," were at one point in the hands of Vietnamese and Soviet bloc officials. The remains of such servicemen can no longer be considered irretrievably lost.

The Vietnamese government was meticulous in its record-keeping about captured or deceased American pilots. Claims that Hanoi has been fully forthcoming with what little documentation it had concerning U.S. POW-MIAs—or, alternatively, that worm- or water-damage or carelessness resulted in everything else being lost—should be seen for what they are: part of a long-running, cynical manipulation of such information by Vietnam.

Vietnamese excavation teams examined downed aircraft even in extremely remote areas. This proves that most crash sites—now being excavated by joint American and Vietnamese military teams at great cost to U.S. taxpayers—were scoured during the war and any prisoners, or their bodies, were removed long ago. Consequently, the illusion of great cooperation from Hanoi in investigating these sites should cease to be a justification for further steps toward normalizing bilateral relations.

The U.S. government has still not come clean about all that it knows concerning our unaccounted-for servicemen. Notwithstanding its professed commitment to declassify all relevant information, the Clinton team appears to be continuing the practice of past U.S. administrations in resisting full disclosure, for example, of electronic intercepts that support the National Alliance's photo collection on two points: (1) American servicemen were abandoned in Vietnam at the war's end and (2) that fact was assiduously covered up in the years since. And Clinton personnel choices make an early end to the cover-up unlikely; a virulent anti-war activist, Charles Searcy, was the president's choice to run POW-MIA affairs at the Pentagon, and the most respected field investigator, Garnett Bell, was replaced by young officers who have no background in the issue or in Southeast Asia.

Addressing the questions raised by Hanoi's photographs should be the sole focus of meetings like that between Secretary of State Warren Christopher and his Vietnamese counterpart in Bangkok this month. This effort should be accompanied by a new and independent evaluation of all available information related to the missing Americans. Clearly, unless and until Hanoi and Washington are fully forthcoming, there must be no further progress toward establishing full diplomatic and economic relations with communist Vietnam.

At a minimum, the National Alliance's photo exhibit ought to be displayed in the House and Senate office buildings, where it would be readily accessible to members of Congress, journalists and the public at large. It is especially important that this reminder of unfinished business be kept squarely in mind as President Clinton puts a new generation of Americans in uniform at risk of a similar fate in places like Bosnia, Haiti and the Golan Heights.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I want to thank the gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN] for his supportive arguments.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. MCDERMOTT). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

S.J. RES. 196

Whereas the United States has fought in many wars and thousands of Americans who served in those wars were captured by the enemy or listed as missing in action;

Whereas many American prisoners of war were subjected to brutal and inhumane treatment by their enemy captors in violation of international codes and customs for the treatment of prisoners of war, and many such prisoners of war died from such treatment;

Whereas many of these Americans are still listed as missing and unaccounted for, and the uncertainty surrounding their fates has caused their families to suffer tragic and continuing hardships;

Whereas, in the Joint Resolution entitled "Joint Resolution designating September 21, 1990, as 'National POW/MIA Recognition Day', and recognizing the National League of Families POW/MIA flag", approved August 10, 1990, the Federal Government officially recognized and designated the National League of Families POW/MIA flag as the symbol of the Nation's concern and commitment to accounting, as fully as possible, for Americans whom are still prisoners of war, missing in action, or unaccounted for in Southeast Asia; and

Whereas the sacrifices of the Americans whom are still missing in action and unaccounted for from all our Nation's wars and their families are deserving of national recognition and support for continued priority efforts to determine the fate of those missing Americans: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. DESIGNATION OF NATIONAL POW/MIA RECOGNITION DAY.

September 16, 1994, is designated "National POW/MIA Recognition Day", and the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling on the people of the United States to observe that day with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

(a) IN GENERAL.—The POW/MIA flag shall be displayed, as a symbol of the concern and commitment of the United States to accounting, as fully as possible, for Americans whom are still prisoners of war, missing in action, or unaccounted for and to ending the uncertainty for their families and the Nation—

(C) Secretary of Veterans Affairs; and

(D) Director of the Selective Service Commission.

(c) POW/MIA FLAG.—As used in this section, the term "POW/MIA flag" means the National League of Families POW/MIA flag recognized officially and designated by section 2 of the Joint Resolution entitled "Joint Resolution designating September 21, 1990, as 'National POW/MIA Recognition Day', and recognizing the National League of Families POW/MIA flag", approved August 10, 1990 (36 U.S.C. 189).

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PRIVILEGES OF THE HOUSE—RETURNING TO THE SENATE THE SENATE AMENDMENTS TO H.R. 4554

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Speaker, I rise to a question of the privileges of the House, and I offer a privileged resolution (H. Res. 518) and ask for its immediate consideration.

H. RES. 518

Resolved, That Senate amendment No. 83 to the bill H.R. 4554 making appropriations for Agriculture, Rural Development, Food and Drug Administration, and Related Agencies programs for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1995, and for other purposes, in the opinion of this House, contravenes the first clause of the seventh section of the first article of the Constitution of the United States and is an infringement of the privileges of this house and that such bill with the Senate amendments thereto be respectfully returned to the Senate with a message communicating this resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The resolution constitutes a question of privileges of the House.

The gentleman from Florida [Mr. GIBBONS] will be recognized for 30 minutes, and the gentleman from California [Mr. THOMAS] will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GIBBONS].

Mr. GIBBONS. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 518 is a simple resolution returning to the Senate the bill, H.R. 4554, because it contravenes the constitutional requirements that revenue measures originate only in the House of Representatives.

Specifically, the Senate amendments to H.R. 4554 provide that amounts are to be credited to the appropriations for the Food and Drug Administration "from fees established and collected to cover the costs of regulation of products under the jurisdiction of the Food and Drug Administration." These fees are not limited to cover only the costs of providing specified regulatory activities. Further, the FDA would not be required to change the fees, in appropriate amounts, only to those persons who benefit from such regulatory activities. Instead, the Senate amendments would allow the FDA to charge a broad cross-section of the public in order to fund the costs of its activities in general. Thus, these fees are not true regulatory fees, but constitute revenues which would fund the Government generally.

Therefore, I am asking that the House insist on its constitutional prerogatives. While the House, by adopting this resolution, will preserve its prerogative to originate revenue matters, I want to make it clear to all Members that our action does not constitute a rejection of the Senate bill on its merits. Our action today is merely procedural in nature. It makes it clear to the Senate that the appropriate procedure for dealing with revenue measures is for the House to act first on a revenue bill and the Senate to add its amendments and seek a conference.

Mr. THOMAS of California. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of the privileged resolution offered by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means.

Some folks may think that this appears to be a rather arcane battle and arcane discussion. It is, in fact, fundamental to an ordered process. The rules of the game in our society is the Constitution of the United States, and in Article I, Section 7, it says all bills for raising revenues shall originate in the House of Representatives. But the Senate may propose or concur with amendments, as on other bills.

The chairman has outlined a fee structure in the bill that we are asking to send back to the Senate. The fee structure in fact raises more money than the fees cover. If you are going to collect more in revenue than you are going to use for a particular purpose, you can call it whatever you want, but it is raising revenue under the Constitution, and the Constitution says that is the right and the privilege of the House of Representatives to originate. All the resolution does is simply tells the other body that we must insist on this constitutional requirement.

Now when the House adopts this privileged resolution to return the bill to the Senate, it does not prejudice the amendment's consideration in any constitutionally accepted manner. Certainly the Senate sponsors are free to seek an appropriate House-generated revenue bill to accomplish that purpose. Whether or not the substance of the measure should be approved and whatever context is to be considered is certainly a discussion for another day. For now the issue is simply: Will the House of Representatives enforce its prerogatives under the Constitution?

Mr. Speaker, I think that should be fairly simple for all of the Members of the House to understand and agree with the chairman, and I support the privileged resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GIBBONS. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. OBEY. Let me simply say that what is at issue here is whether or not the House will take an action which is called blue-slipping the appropriation bill for agriculture for the coming fiscal year. The reason the Committee on Ways and Means wants to do that is because the Senate inappropriately adopted an amendment which is clearly an effort simply to legislate more spending in the agriculture appropriation bill above the amount that would be allowed for the budget caps, and the way they do that is to inappropriately use a revenue device. I grant that. As chairman of the Committee on Appropriations, I fully appreciate the need for the Senate to cease and desist on items like this. But there are a number of ways that it can be done it seems to me. The committee can, if it chooses, pursue its right today. I fully recognize that right. If the committee pursues it in this manner, however, and if the Senate bill manager cannot obtain unanimous consent to vacate the ill-advised Senate action, then it means that we are forced to repass the agriculture appropriation bill in this House, repass it again in the Senate, consuming additional time at a time when this institution is already under great duress and great stress because of the large nature of the bills such as the health care bill and the crime bill which we are still trying to wrestle with.

An alternative manner in which to proceed would still preserve the rights of the Committee on Ways and Means to blue-slip this bill when it comes back from conference if the offending provision has not been removed. I have made it quite clear, both orally and in a letter to the chairman of the committee, that our committee will not come back from conference with that offending provision. We reject it outright and would insist that it not be included.

I cannot prevent the committee from exercising its right to offer this resolution today. They are correct. The committee does have the right and privilege to offer the resolution. But in a constructive atmosphere, one does not always need to exercise every right and privilege that one has. At least when that right is exercised, it would be good for this institution if that right were exercised in a way which took into account the greater needs of the institution at the moment.

I take a back seat to no one in my insisting that the Senate follow constitutional dictates, and I fully acknowledge the right of the Committee on Ways and Means to take this action. But I would suggest that a more constructive way in which to take it would be to withhold this action for the moment and allow us to remove the offending provision in conference.

Our committee did not, after all, place that offending matter in the bill. It was done in the Senate. They added the amount of spending that is in question. And we made quite clear it will be taken out and we will not bring an agriculture appropriation bill back to the floor if the Senate does not back off on its provision.

It seems to me that that would be a far more constructive way to deal with the situation at hand, rather than to add to the gridlock which we have around here by requiring this House, if the Senate does not do what it ought to do, to repass again an appropriation bill, and have the Senate repass it again, at a time when our focus ought to be on health care and ought to be on crime.

Mr. GIBBONS. Madam Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, I thank the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations for his remarks. I have no argument with him about the substance of his remarks. I think he has been very straightforward and very professional and very gentlemanly in his approach. But we think it is appropriate that we send this back to the Senate at this time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Ms. BROWN of Florida). Does the gentleman from California wish to use further time?

Mr. THOMAS of California. I do, Madam Speaker. I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Madam Speaker, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations talked about the greater needs of this institution. I think what is at issue is the Constitution of the United States. The issue is not inconvenience. The issue is not politics. The issue is not time. In part, the issue is you folks have controlled this body for so long that inconvenience, politics, and time may be more important than the primary and fundamental issue of the Constitution. The greater needs of the institution in the long run are met by making sure that we do not, for convenience, politics, or time, decide that something as fundamental as the origination of a bill, should take second place.

Madam Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania [Mr. WALKER] such time as he may consume.

Mr. WALKER. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Madam Speaker, we are faced here with a real problem and one that is developing, and I congratulate the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GIBBONS], the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, for the work he has done in the past to protect the House and the Constitution, and I congratulate him for what he is doing here today.

This is not the first instance of this. It is about the fourth instance of this within just the last 4 or 5 weeks.

Back on July 14, the Treasury-Postal appropriations bill, we had a similar kind of concern. And to his credit, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GIBBONS], represented on the floor by the gentleman from New York [Mr. RANGEL], came to the floor and did what he is doing today: Assured the privileges of the House with regard to tax measures were protected.

Then on July 21, another bill came over, not an appropriations bill this time, but the Veterans Health Programs Improvement Act of 1994 came over with a revenue measure attached. Once again the Committee on Ways and Means did what it was that should be done. The gentleman from Florida [Mr. GIBBONS] came to the floor and protected the privileges of the House at that point, as should be done on those kinds of measures.

But the Senate was not finished. On July 21, they also added another tax measure to a bill that day, the Toxic Substance Control Act, which was also brought over with a revenue measure attached. Once again, the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GIBBONS], to his credit, came to the House floor and protected the privileges of the House on this particular tax measure.

What I am saying is there is a pattern here in the Senate now showing itself up in the appropriation bills. Prior to this, there was the appropriation bill on Commerce and Justice. On that particular one, an accommodation was worked out much in the way that the gentleman from Wisconsin [Mr. OBEY] has described to the House here. It was not blue-slipped on the way to conference, but was eligible for a blue slip on the way out of conference.

The Senate, seeing that action, has not decided they are also going to do it in yet another bill, the Agriculture, Rural Development, and Food Development Administration.

This simply cannot be allowed to happen. The fact is that we cannot put aside the Constitution in order to accommodate our legislative agenda in the House of Representatives. The Constitution is very firm on this point, and the Senate knows exactly what it is doing because it is doing it over, and over, and over, and over again, just within the last few weeks.

They are doing so because it allows them to escape a budget control mechanism that has been put in their way, and that is that they cannot spend more than they have revenues to accomplish. So what they are now trying to do is spend more and add the revenues on in the Senate.

We in the House should not accommodate that. We should make absolutely certain that our prerogatives with regard to taxing and spending are absolutely protected.

That is what is happening here right now. The prerogatives of the House are being protected by the resolution of the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GIBBONS]. I congratulate him for it. It is something we need to do each time this challenge is brought before us. We cannot allow the matters to be resolved somewhere in conference committees in the hope it will come back the right way.

We need to understand that this is not just a matter of an appropriations bill. It has now been in several committees where they have pulled the same kind of trick. I do not think the Senate is going to understand until we get to the point that every bill that they send over of this type is immediately sent back to them.

So, again, I thank the gentleman for what he has done.

Mr. DORNAN. Madam Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS of California. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DORNAN. Madam Speaker, if I am following this correctly, by putting new taxes, user fees or any other type of taxes, into an appropriations bill in the other body, they are opening up a window for more spending. Ergo, this is the much heard about tax and spending that goes on up here on Jenkins Hill.

Mr. WALKER. Madam Speaker, if the gentleman will yield further, precisely. Thank goodness the Constitution protects us from that. We have an opportunity here now to uphold what our forefathers in their wisdom knew about the Constitution, and that is that any revenue measures ought to start in the people's body. This one did not, and we are now going to send it back to the Senate, because they did not do it the right way, and we thank the gentleman from Florida [Mr. GIBBONS] for allowing the House to do this in the right way.

I thank the gentleman from California [Mr. THOMAS] for yielding.

Mr. OBEY. Madam Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. THOMAS of California. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. OBEY. Madam Speaker, I would simply like to reiterate one point, and I am not going to push this to a rollcall vote. I understand what is going to happen. But I simply want to say that in my view, this is not a question of the Constitution. This is not a question of constitutional prerogatives. It is a question of at what time, at what point, and under what manner, the constitutional prerogative is going to be exercised.

I believe that constitutional prerogatives are like opinions. Just because we have them, we do not always have to express them, at least not at the immediate time.

It just simply seems to me that the same purpose could be accomplished, the constitutional prerogative could be protected, if we were allowed to simply proceed to take out the offending Senate action in the conference.

I fully agree with the gentleman from Pennsylvania. I think this is simply an end run on spending caps. I resent it very much, and I am not going to allow it to happen. But the problem is that the process which the gentleman is pursuing today leaves us at the mercy of the ability of the other body to be responsible.

I think that under some circumstances that might be a very weak reed to lean upon and so it seems to me that the better course would be for us to responsibly take the offending matter out without requiring each house to go through another set of hoops. That is what I was trying to accomplish here today. I am sorry I could not do it.

Mr. THOMAS of California. Madam Speaker, reclaiming my time, I appreciate the gentleman's comments, but I think the history, as was outlined by the gentleman from Pennsylvania, clearly indicates that were this the first offense, obviously the option that the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations now seeks as an alternative might be appropriate. But when the Senate has done this not once a year, not twice a year, but when it does it three and four times a month, I think what we are about here is in part behavior modification and that perhaps this inconvenience by the way in which we are upholding our constitutional right might, in fact, get the Senate to understand that if they are responsible at the outset, they will not have to be responsible at the backend, as the gentleman from Wisconsin is concerned about, in terms of their ability to do it the right way.

It seems to me that an immediate response by the House of Representatives, in perhaps the most inconvenient way possible. will mean that we will not have to address this in the future.

Therefore, I support the resolution by the chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means, the gentleman from Florida.

Madam Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GIBBONS. Madam Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SPECIAL ORDERS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of February 11, 1994, and June 10, 1994, and under a previous order of the House, the following Members are recognized for 5 minutes each.

HEALTH CARE, SMALL BUSINESS, AND GRASS ROOTS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from South Carolina [Mr. DERRICK] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. DERRICK. Madam Speaker, ever since health care reform became a serious possibility certain factions interested in killing the initiative have spread disinformation and alarmist propaganda vilifying the entire effort. They portray reform as a murky conspiracy to enslave the public, or a malicious attempt to destroy business, or a bureaucratic campaign to expand Government control over the people.

The propaganda machines fired up by the defenders of the status quo have been working overtime. They've conducted an all out effort to convince the American people that they don't want health care reform. But reality will always belie propaganda, especially when the propaganda contradicts the people's experience.

The American people want and need health care reform. Mass mailings, phone banks and rabid talk show hosts can't persuade them otherwise. Americans aren't impressed with arguments that reform will ruin the quality of their health care and cost them more money. Americans already know that every year they pay more for less health care. They've been watching what health care they could afford evaporate.

If Congress lacks the courage to reform the health care system now, the situation will continue to deteriorate, more Americans will lose their coverage, and the blame will be ours.

Americans know the system needs reform to remedy the problems they face every day. Seventy-eight percent of Americans favor universal coverage, and 75 percent even favor employers sharing responsibility with their employees to pay for health insurance. Well-funded lobbying groups such as the NFIB aim their rhetoric at small businesses, telling them that reform is a job-killer that will close them down. The truth is that small business will benefit greatly from reform. As it stands they pay up to 50 percent more for the health insurance than large firms. A third of them see their insurance premiums rise by 25 percent every year, and the burden of covering the growing numbers of uninsured Americans is getting shifted onto their shoulders. The status quo hurts small business.

Wednesday a group of small business owners from Virginia, Pennsylvania, New York, and Washington, DC, took time away from their businesses to come to the Capitol and voice their support for health care reform. They know that reform will level the playing field for small businesses. It will lower their overhead tied up in health care costs, making it easier and cheaper to operate. These businessmen and women are members of the Small Business Coalition for Health Care Reform, a grass roots organization representing 626,000 businesses employing 5.5 million people. Unlike the NFIB, a well-funded lobbying group representing big-money interests, the Small Business Coalition supports reform.

Where groups such as NFIB are trying to kill reform and preserve the status quo beloved by their funders, the Small Business Coalition knows how much small business has to gain from reform. Their members, the small business grass roots, agree.

It's important to remember that grass roots organizations found the support for health care reform. Reform won't benefit a particular special interest, unless you define America as a special interest. Small businesses will gain from reform, but the focus of reform is the mass of employed, hard working, middle-income Americans who, despite their labors, still can't afford health care for themselves or their families. Anti-reform propaganda tries to convince people that reform will limit their options or degrade the quality of their health care.

That's not much of an argument for people who can't afford any health care or insurance at all. If anything, by guaranteeing coverage and insurance that can't be taken away, health care reform expands the average American's health care options.

Americans know it, and they overwhelmingly support reform. You can see the support by looking at the growing number of grass-roots organizations representing millions of Americans who have declared their support for the Guaranteed Health Insurance Act. They include labor unions, consumer advocacy groups, medical providers, health advocacy groups, teachers, education groups, family advocates, senior citizen groups, farmers, veterans and children's advocates.

In short, there are myriad organizations who know that their members can only benefit from health care reform. Members of Congress shouldn't confuse these voices with mere special interests. The voice they hear expresses America's will, and the will is for health care reform.

LEGITIMATE OPPOSITION TO THE CRIME BILL RULE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from California [Mr. HORN] will be recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HORN. Madam Speaker, it is utter nonsense to say that all of those who voted against the rule on the crime bill yesterday afternoon put the interests of the powerful National Rifle Association above those of their constituents. Yet, that is what some who are uninformed are saying.

This Member happened to campaign for a ban against assault rifles. This Member voted for a ban against assault rifles. This Member will again vote for a ban against assault rifles when the conference report on the Violent Crime Control and Law Enforcement Act of 1994 properly comes before this Chamber.

What bothered a number of us, Madam Speaker, was the arrogance and the misuse of the rules which was involved in the rule that preceded yesterday's conference report. It violated what this Chamber is all about; that is, a Chamber that seeks to reflect the people's will.

The minority is tired of having proposals brought in here that you cannot read in time, that are rammed down our throat with some pseudo sense of urgency. Of course there is urgency about crime. We see it, those of us from urban America. But where was ,the sense of urgency when this was happening 2, 3 years ago, months ago, et cetera?

The conference committee certainly took its time. They finished in late July. On the Republican side, we did not get the printed report with the agreed measure to be submitted to the Senate and the House, and then to the President, until 3:20 p.m. yesterday afternoon. We voted at about 5 p.m.

The conference report contained hundreds of pages, many of which had never been considered by the Senate or the House. They were add-ons put in by the Democratic majority in that conference committee.

What particularly concerned us, Madam Speaker, is when the very able and powerful chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary went before the Committee on Rules and was specifically asked to identify where were the point of order problems. That means where were the activities, programs, legal language, et cetera in the bill that violated existing House rules in the final reconciled version submitted by the conferees.

He refused to answer that question. He said he was not sure he knew, and then he said even if he did know, he would not tell them since it might be used against the bill on the floor. The Committee on Rules is an agent of the House of Representatives. When you insult our agent, you also insult our House. It is tragic that the nine member Democratic majority of that committee did not pursue what the four member Republican minority sought.

When a committee chairman seeks to waive the House rules prior to consideration of a bill, the members of the Committee on Rules are entitled to know what it is that they are waiving. To the average citizen, this might sound complicated, but if the Members do not know what they are voting on, how can they possibly reflect the will of the people? It is the people to whom we are responsible. We are not responsible to a chairman, we are not responsible to a committee, we are responsible to the people, and to civility and following the rules of this Chamber.

Madam Speaker, when we swear and take an oath on opening day to support the Constitution of the United States, that includes the rules of the House of Representatives, pursuant to that Constitution. I suspect some rules we have here such as the "king-of-the-hill" rule and other modern creations which prevent the process should be challenged in court. Certainly the founders would never have dreamed them up.

The timing of the vote violated the Legislative Reorganization Act of 1970, in that the 443-page conference report was not available to Members of the House 3 days ahead of its consideration. That situation is intolerable. That is why the chairman of Judiciary sought a waiver of the rules.

In addition, on another subject related to the crime bill, I am informed by the gentleman from Florida [Mr. McCollum], the author of many of the Republican anticrime bills, and the most knowledgeable member of the Committee on the Judiciary, that when the anticrime bill left the Senate, it left at a price tag of $22 billion.

When it left the House, it left at a price tag of $26 billion. When it was done with by the Senate and House conferees who prepared the conference report which contained the final version of the proposed law, the price tag had increased to $33 billion. That is an $11 billion increase! That amount of an increase has seldom been seen.

In addition, Madam Speaker, items were added in conference, as I noted, which had never been in either bill. They came as a surprise to the Republican members in the conference if they were ever consulted. The Representatives in the House, each of us elected by the people, have a right to know what is in the legislation before them.

Besides great changes in the amount of money involved, there were vital matters of substance, which were drastically changed.

Items which had been passed by both the House and the Senate by overwhelming votes were simply thrown on the cutting room floor.

One example was offered by our distinguished colleague, Susan Molinari, a Republican from New York. Her amendment would have changed the Federal rules of evidence to allow prosecutors in sexual assault and child molestation cases to introduce evidence that the defendant has committed similar crimes in the past. The Senate approved it by a vote of 75 to 19. The House supported it by a vote of 348 to 62 on a motion to instruct the House conferees to include this language in the final version of the proposed law.

Similarly, the distinguished gentlewoman from Washington [Jennifer Dunn] also a Republican offered the Sexually Violent Predators Act. This amendment would notify communities when convicted sexual predators moved into their area, giving families warning that danger exists in their neighborhoods. The Senate had adopted the language unanimously. A motion to instruct the House conferees to support this language was adopted by the House by a vote of 407 to 13.

Madam Speaker, with this type of disregard to the will of this House, when both of these important proposals were overwhelmingly approved by this Chamber, yet ended up littered on the cutting room floor, with no respect for the democratic process of this Chamber, I think many more should have voted against the rule than did.

Last night I watched the press conferences held by several of the contesting parties to the issues involved in this legislation. I had a feeling that several of them should have had a good night's sleep before commenting on the defeat of the rule.

If the Democratic majority in the next conference will get the message that not only Republicans but dozens of Democrats want to reduce the proposed legislation by several billion dollars in social programs which compete with already existing ones, then we will have a better bill.

If the Democratic majority in the next conference will get the message that not only Republicans but dozens of Democrats want to restore the Federal rules of evidence re those who commit sexual assault and molest children to the language approved by both Houses, then we will have a better bill.

If the President and the Democratic leadership in the House will wake up and accept the offer repeatedly made by the Republican whip and Republican leader to be Newt Gingrich to engage in bipartisan collaboration so that Republicans will participate in the takeoffs and not simply the crash landings, then we will have better public policy and a more united Congress and Nation. The gentleman from Georgia [Mr. Gingrich] has made that offer ever since the successful collaboration we had on NAFTA the North American Free-Trade Agreement.

Let us work together and we can adopt an effective anticrime bill and a sensible health care bill.

Madam Speaker, I was particularly impressed with the comments of the ranking Republican on Judiciary when he spoke on the problems with the handling of this legislation. There are few members of this body more respected than the gentleman from New York [Mr. Fish]. Hamilton Fish is dedicated to public service just as his family has been for almost two centuries. When he is upset, it is time for the House to listen to his thoughtful and wise comments.

Mr. Fish. Mr. Speaker, I rise in opposition to the rule. This conference report contains provisions which I oppose and, in addition, the conference committee deleted provisions which I supported. However, my opposition to this rule is based as much on procedural objections as it is on substantive policy.

As we all know, violent crime is a devastating national problem. Violent crime has increased in this country over 23 percent since 1988. A violent crime is committed once every 22 seconds and a murder is committed once every 22 minutes. A rape occurs every 5 minutes and a robbery every 47 seconds. Over 70 percent of the violent crimes committed in our country are committed by repeat offenders.

These are not just statistics. The victims of these crimes are real people—they are our constituents—and the ultimate victim is society. The crime epidemic has brought with it the pestilence of fear and Congress should address this complex problem in a comprehensive, realistic and bipartisan way. Whether we are Republicans or Democrats this is a national crisis that we share and partisan politics should not interfere with the best solutions.

Back in March, following action in the House Judiciary Committee on the Violent Crime Control and Law Enforcement Act of 1994, I went before the Rules Committee urging that certain key amendments be made in order. Those were amendments put forward by the Republican members of our Committee and reflected a number of very valid and valuable approaches to the serious problem of crime we have in this country.

Unfortunately, when this legislation was brought to the floor in April, several of my Republican colleagues were prevented from offering amendments under a highly restrictive rule. Still other Republican amendments were allowed but they were subjected to a king-of-the-hill procedure that prevented any real genuine opportunity for success.

Subsequently, after the legislation was passed by the House of Representatives, I appointed the four most senior Republican members of the House Judiciary Committee to serve on the conference committee on the Crime bill. For many weeks and months, the conference committee did not meet. Republican members were routinely excluded from closed door meetings during this time period. Then, finally, when the conference committee briefly convened, Republican Members were routinely refused key documents and several significant Republican amendments were dropped or weakened. Numerous Republican proposals were defeated in conference through the utilization of the proxy vote mechanism. Ultimately, none of the Judiciary Republican conferees signed the conference report. How could they approve a document which they had no part in formulating?

Furthermore, the conference report itself is a document that has been conspicuous by its absence. As of yesterday evening, the Members of this House did not have a complete, final copy of the conference report. The conference version, as I understand it, is almost four inches thick, it is over 1,000 pages long. How do we evaluate a major piece of legislation that no one has been permitted to read?

Mr. Speaker, I stand here as the Ranking Republican on the House Judiciary Committee. The upcoming vote on the rule is a procedural vote that must be evaluated in the light of these events. The rules process goes to the very heart of our role as legislators and our rights as Members of this House. I am angered and dismayed about the manner in which Republican Members have been denied their rightful role on this very important public policy question.

Mr. Speaker, I will vote "no" on this rule because of the tactics used by the Majority party—tactics which insult the Republican Members of this House and the American citizens we were elected to represent.

Madam Speaker, I attach an excerpt from "How Our Laws Are Made" which has been prepared by the Congressional Research Service. It explains the role of the Committee on Rules.

X. OBTAINING CONSIDERATION OF MEASURES

Obviously certain measures pending on the House and Union Calendars are more important and urgent than others and it is necessary to have a system permitting their consideration ahead of those that do not require immediate action. Because all measures are placed on those calendars in the order in which they are reported to the House, the latest bill reported would be the last to be taken up if the calendar number alone were the determinating factor.

SPECIAL RESOLUTIONS

To avoid delays and to provide some degree of selectivity in the consideration of measures, it is possible to have them taken up out of order by obtaining from the Committee on Rules a special resolution or "rule" for their consideration. That Committee, which is composed of majority and minority Members but with a larger proportion of majority Members than other committees, is specifically granted jurisdiction over resolutions relating to the order of business of the House. Usually the Chairman of the committee that has favorably reported the bill appears before the Committee on Rules accompanied by the sponsor of the measure and one or more Members of the Chairman's committee in support of the request for a resolution providing for its immediate consideration. If the Committee on Rules is satisfied that the measure should be taken up it will report a resolution reading substantially as follows with respect to a bill on the Union Calendar:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. ___) entitled, etc., and the first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed ___ hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on ___, the bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and the previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit.

If the measure is on the House Calendar the resolution reads substantially as follows:

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to consider the bill (H.R. ___) entitled, etc., in the House.

The resolution may waive points or order against the bill. When it limits or prevents floor amendments, it is popularly known as a "closed rule".

SPECIAL COUNSEL IN WHITEWATER INVESTIGATION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HOYER] will be recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. HOYER. Madam Speaker, I rise to speak of a matter that is troubling me, and I think troubling other individuals. Some years ago, we created a special counsel, a special prosecutor, if you will. That position was created to assure objective, nonpartisan, nonpolitical review of possible wrongdoing within the executive department.

The reason for doing that was so that the Attorney General, who is appointed by the President of the United States, and who is the office to whom the U.S. attorneys report, would not be in effect in the chain of command as it related to the investigation of alleged wrongdoing of, in this case, her boss, the President.

I supported that legislation, and supported it when we reauthorized it recently. Because that legislation had not been reauthorized and signed into law when the question of Whitewater arose, and after the requests of the Members of the Republican Party in particular, concurred in, ultimately by the administration, the Attorney General, because the legislation was not in effect, appointed a special prosecutor for the purpose of investigating Whitewater.

After she had done so, she carefully reviewed prospective nominees and she chose for that position a Republican, a Republican who was known for his integrity and his legal skill, a Republican who in fact had experience as a prosecutor and was known to be a thorough and fair investigator. That gentleman's name was Fiske.

Subsequent to his appointment, he undertook the investigation and has made certain reports. The same people who had demanded the appointment of a special prosecutor, the same people who believed Mr. Fiske was a fair-minded, judicious prosecutor with personal and legal integrity have subsequently criticized him because they did not like his findings. His findings, of course, were that there was no transgression of law, no laws broken, no ethical violations in relationship to the communciations between the Treasury Department and the White House.

These Republicans, frankly, were not satisfied. Ten Republicans have written to the Federal court. But I get ahead of my story.

Subsequent to that appointment, we did in fact pass the reauthorization to the special prosecutor law. That law provides for a panel, appointed by the Chief Justice of the U.S. Supreme Court, to have the authority to choose a special prosecutor. That panel is currently composed of Judge David Sentelle and two other judges. Judge Sentelle was appointed by Chief Justice Rehnquist. Chief Justice Rehnquist, of course, was in the Nixon Cabinet and appointed by Nixon to the Supreme Court. Judge Sentelle as I understand it, is the first nonretired judge to chair this special prosecutor selection panel of Federal judges. The other two judges who sit on that panel are retired judges as has historically been the case. One of the other judges was appointed by a Republican and one by a Democrat, President Johnson.

I mentioned the 10 Members of this body who wrote to Judge Sentelle and the panel requesting that Mr. Fiske be removed as the special prosecutor. Mr.

Fiske has been at this for months. Mr. Fiske and the staff that he has collected at a cost of over $2 million in effect were asked by these 10 to be replaced, to be set aside, not because there was a question frankly of the results, although I suggest that they were upset with the results, but because they alleged that there was a conflict of interest.

INTRODUCTION OF THE FINANCIAL SERVICES COMPETITIVENESS ACT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from North Carolina [Mr. NEAL] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. NEAL of North Carolina. Madam Speaker, with the 21st century rapidly approaching, it is time that the legal framework of the U.S. financial services industry catch up with the marketplace. The technology of today, from computers to communications, has changed the face of financial services.

Unfortunately, our laws impose an antiquated legal structure on the new and competitive financial marketplace. As a result, we have a system that is tremendously inefficient and costly. It undercuts our international competitiveness, limits consumer choice and convenience, and ultimately suppresses economic growth.

Dramatic shifts in financial distribution networks and product lines have resulted in a rapid decline in the relative role of banks and other depository intermediaries. From 1980 to 1990, banks' market share fell a full 10 percentage points, from 37 to 27 percent of total financial intermediary assets. By 1990, banks had lost more than one-fourth of the market share with which they began the decade.

Madam Speaker, Congress has the ability to provide our financial system with the tools it needs to develop a better and more efficient system for the delivery of financial products while, at the same time, ensuring the safety and soundness of insured deposits. Our objective should be to ensure that our financial service firms are able to provide consumers and businesses with the most cost-efficient and highest quality financial products and to compete fairly in a global marketplace, while operating in a safe and sound manner.

Our regulatory system for financial services providers must also move toward the 21st century. Our present system is a patchwork of market and institutional regulation resulting from ad hoc responses to the historical developments, with no central theme. It is a house built over time without any floor plan or, indeed, any plan at all.

Even today, bills are introduced in Congress that react only to specific issues of immediate concern. One such example is H.R. 3447, the Securities Regulatory Equality Act of 1993, which responds to the narrow issue of bank sales of mutual funds.

I know from personal experience that bills often are drafted and amendments are crafted, not to deal with regulatory problems in a comprehensive manner, but to avoid or attain jurisdiction by one congressional committee or another. We are left with a hodge-podge of partial solutions to larger problems, the creation of competitive inequities among market participants, uneven regulations for similar activities across industries and forum shopping by regulated parties. The inability of the House to deal with the larger problems of the financial services sector in a comprehensive manner increases costs for our economy, to the detriment of both efficiency and safety.

One of my purposes in introducing this legislation, Madam Speaker, is to try to get Members to focus on the need to deal with these issues in a comprehensive way. We should not keep careening from one narrow issue to another, be it mutual fund sales disclosures, the use of derivatives, or the underwriting of securities, while pretending that the underlying nature of the financial services industry is the same as it was in 1933.

The world has changed in the past 60 years, but our financial services laws have not kept pace. It is time to recognize that the entire legal structure of the industry has become outmoded and is badly in need of change. Our response should not just be to try to apply another quick fix to whatever problem has caught our eye today. Sooner or later, and I believe sooner, we must break the cycle of temporary patchwork responses to innovations within the financial services industry and consider comprehensive reform. If not, we will be left with the financial services equivalent of hand-cranked telephones and quill pens in a world of cellular phones and fax machines.

Madam Speaker, the Financial Services Competitiveness Act, which I am introducing today, will facilitate a debate addressing the basic structure problems that are the result of outdated affiliation and activities restrictions contained in the Bank Holding Company Act, the Glass-Stegall Act and various other laws. It is designed to modernize the legal and regulatory framework while simultaneously imposing strong safeguards and more effective regulations. The legislation does not seek to realign the jurisdiction of regulators, but rather provide for the functional regulation of financial activities.

Under the bill, federally insured depository institutions would be permitted to affiliate with other financial and nonfinancial businesses. Thus, a bank with federally insured deposits, an insurance company and a company underwriting securities could all be owned by the same diversified financial services holding company.

Allowing affiliations would permit firms to increase their operating efficiencies and better serve their customers. Consumers would benefit from greater convenience, lower prices and enhanced competition. All financial services providers could offer similar options through the holding company structure. It provides competitive equality. It does not favor one industry over another. It encourages more effective competition.

At the same time, there would be safeguards to protect the taxpayer-backed deposit insurance funds. Each subsidiary of a holding company would be required to be separately capitalized. In addition, each holding company would be required to maintain adequate levels of capital in its depository institutions, and if it failed to do so, it would be required to divest the financial institutions and as well as infuse additional capital to bring the institutions into capital compliance. This provision in particular would insure that diversified financial services holding companies take seriously their responsibility of owning an insured depository institution subsidiary. It also would provide American taxpayers with an extra level of protection—a troubled bank would turn first to its diversified financial holding company, and not the taxpayer.

In addition, banking subsidiaries would not be permitted to engage in nonbanking activities. Each subsidiary would be regulated by the appropriate regulator as under existing law, meaning that securities subsidiaries would be regulated by the Securities and Exchange Commission, insurance subsidiaries by State insurance regulators and financial institutions by the appropriate banking regulator.

Madam. Speaker, it is readily apparent that the existing legal structure is not consistent with market realities and the globalization of the financial marketplace. It is time to craft our Nation's financial services policy to strengthen the system instead of restricting and detracting from the health and dynamism of the market.

I recognize that we will not be modernizing our financial services industry this year. But the Financial Services Competitiveness Act will help focus the debate on the need to accomplish modernization. I am pleased that the bill has strong bipartisan cosponsorship—Representatives McCOLLUM, LaFALCE, FRANK, LaROCCO, ORTON, DOOLEY, RIDGE, BAKER of Louisiana, and KING are joining me in introducing the bill today—and I look forward to working with them and others in this Congress to lay the groundwork for consideration of this extremely important issue.

THE FSCA—"FINANCIAL SERVICES COMPETITIVENESS ACT"

SECTION BY SECTION ANALYSIS

To create an open and competitive marketplace for financial services which ensures the safety and soundness of the nation's financial system as well as the availability of innovative financial products and services for consumers, business and government at the lowest possible cost.

Section 1—Title

This section provides that this Act may be cited as the "Financial Services Competitiveness Act".

Section 2—Findings and Purpose

The Congress finds that (1) outdated statutes and regulations inhibit innovation, efficiency, and competition in the financial services industry to the detriment of consumers and providers, and (2) new legal framework for financial services must be created which will accord all financial services companies equal opportunity to serve the full range of credit and financial needs in the marketplace and (3) expanded product and service opportunities for all components of the financial services industry would strengthen individual intermediaries as well as the overall financial system, and (4) rapid globalization of the financial services marketplace and the emerging interdependence of major financial markets further underscore the necessity of modernizing domestic laws to maintain the competitiveness of U.S. intermediaries and the preeminence of U.S. financial markets, and (5) regulation of separate segments, subsidiaries and affiliates along functional lines without regard to ownership and control would serve national priorities better than the present system.

The purpose of the Act is to promote the safety and soundness of the nation's financial system, the availability of financial products and services to consumers, businesses, charitable institutions and governments in an efficient and cost-effective manner, to promote a legal structure governing providers of financial services that permits open and fair competition and affords all financial services companies equal opportunity to serve the full range of credit and financial needs in the marketplace, to ensure that domestic financial institutions and companies are able to compete effectively in international financial markets and to encourage regulation of financial activities and companies along functional lines without regard to ownership, control or affiliation.

Paragraph (1)—Affiliate—defines the term "affiliate" of a company to mean any other company which controls, is controlled by or is under common control with such company.

Paragraph (2)—Adequately Capitalized—defines the term "adequately capitalized" to have the same meaning as in section 38(b) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act.

Paragraph (3)—Appropriate Federal Banking Agency—defines "appropriate Federal banking agency" to mean the Comptroller of the Currency in the case of national banks or District banks, the Federal Reserve Board in the case of member banks (other than national banks), the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation in the case of insured state banks that are not members of the Federal Reserve System and the Director of the Office of Thrift Supervision in the case of savings associations.

Paragraph (4)—Bank Holding Company—defines the term "bank holding company" as it is defined in section 2(a) of the Bank Holding Company Act of 1956, as amended.

Paragraph (5)—Board—defines the term "Board" to mean the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System.

Paragraph (6)—Company—defines the term "company" to mean any corporation, partnership, business trust, association or similar organization. However, corporations that are majority owned by the United States or any State are excluded from the definition of company.

Paragraph (7)—Control—defines the term "control" as the power directly or indirectly to direct the management or policies of a company or to vote 25% or more of any class of voting securities of a company.

There are four exceptions from the definition of control. These pertain to ownership of voting securities acquired or held by a company:

(1) as agent, trustee or in some other fiduciary capacity;

(2) as underwriter, for such period of time as will permit the sale of those securities on a reasonable basis;

(3) in connection with or incidental to market-making, dealing, trading, brokerage or other securities-related activities, provided that such shares are not acquired with a view toward acquiring, exercising or transferring control of the management or policies of the company;

(4) for the purpose of securing or collecting of a prior debt until two years after the date of acquisition.

In addition, no company formed for the sole purpose of proxy solicitation shall be deemed to be in control of another company by virtue of its acquisition of voting rights of the other company's securities.

Paragraph (8)—Depository Institution Holding Company—defines the term "depository institution holding company" as having the same meaning as in section 3(w)(1) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act.

Paragraph (9)—Diversified Financial Services Holding Company—defines a DFSHC to be any company that files a notice with the Board that it intends to comply with the provisions of this section, and controls an insured depository institution or either:

(i) has, within the preceding twelve months filed a notice pursuant to subsection (b) of this section to establish or acquire control of an insured depository institution or a company owning such an insured depository, or

(ii) controls a company which, within the preceding twelve months, has filed an application for Federal deposit insurance, provided, that such notice or application has not been disapproved by the appropriate Federal banking agency.

Paragraph (10)—Financial Institution—defines the term "financial institution" to include any bank, savings association, insurance company, finance company, real estate company, securities company or other financial services company that is regulated, supervised or examined under the laws of any State.

Paragraph (11)—Insured Depository Institution—defines the term "insured depository institution" to have the same meaning given to it in section 3(c)(2) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act.

Paragraph (12)—Representative—defines the term "representative" to include any agent, principal, solicitor, broker, director, or officer, employee or other representative of any company, insured depository institution or affiliate thereof.

Paragraph (13)—Savings and Loan Holding Company—defines the term "savings and loan holding company" as having the meaning given to it in section 10(a) of the Home Owner's Loan Act.

Paragraph (14)—Savings Association—defines the term "savings association" as having the meaning given to it in section 3(b) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act.

Paragraph (15)—State—"State" is defined as having the meaning given to it in section 3(a) of the Federal Deposit Insurance Act.

Section 4—Establishment of a Diversified Financial Services Holding Company

Section 4 creates a new type of financial company, a diversified financial services holding company (DFSHC), and sets out the terms and conditions under which a company can be established and must be operated.

No person may take any action which causes any company to become a diversified financial services holding company without submitting prior notice to the Board of such person's intention to establish a diversified financial services holding company. The Board shall establish requirements and procedures for the submission of the notice.

A bank holding company shall lose its status as a bank holding company immediately upon filing the notice of its election to become a DFSHC. Similarly, a savings and loan holding company that elects to become a DFSHC will lose that status upon filing the notice of its election to become a DFSHC.

To assure that each depository institution controlled by a DFSHC would be subject to regulation and supervision by an appropriate Federal banking agency, owners of an uninsured depository institution would not be able to avail themselves of the opportunity to become a DFSHC, unless they agree to convert such uninsured institution into an insured depository institution.

The provisions of Glass-Steagall do not apply with respect to the affiliation of any bank that is an affiliate of a diversified financial services holding company with such company or any other affiliate of the company.

Section 5—Compliance With Change in Control Requirements

This section provides that any DFSHC wishing to acquire control of an insured depository institution or company owning such institution must comply with the requirements of the Change in Control Act.

Section 6—Adequate Capitalization

This section governs the capitalization of insured depository institutions that are controlled by a DFSHC.

Subsection (a)—Notification—In the event of a finding by the appropriate Federal banking agency that an insured depository institution controlled by a DFSHC is not adequately capitalized, such agency shall immediately provide a written notification of such non-compliance to the DFSHC.

Subsection (b)—Bond, Guaranty, Deposit or Surplus Account—At the time of the notification described in subsection (a) or at any time thereafter, the appropriate Federal banking agency may in its discretion require a DFSHC in an amount equal to the capital deficiency set forth in the notification to either:

(A) provide a bond, guarantee or similar undertaking in a form prescribed by the appropriate Federal banking agency,

(B) place and thereafter maintain on deposit in a segregated, earmarked account at the insured depository institution cash or investment securities (i.e., securities of the type that may be held by national banks for their own account pursuant to section 5136 of the Revised Statutes, as amended, or other liquid assets as the appropriate Federal banking agency, may permit),

(C) make a contribution to the surplus capital of the insured depository institution which shall be segregated from and not treated as capital, or

(D) reduce the amount of total assets of the institution, until the insured depository institution is capitalized pursuant to an agreement entered into between the DFSHC and the appropriate Federal banking agency or is otherwise made to become adequately capitalized; or the DFSHC has divested control of the insured depository institution pursuant to subsection (d) described below.

Upon receipt of the notification described in subsection (a) an insured depository institution shall not declare or pay a dividend to any shareholder and, upon appointment of a conservator pursuant to subsection (c), the DFSHC shall immediately return to such insured depository institution any dividends received from such insured depository institution during the period beginning 270 days prior to the receipt of the notification.

Subsection (c)—Appointment of Conservator—If the DFSHC fails to comply with any of the requirements of subsection (b), or the DFSHC fails within 45 days of its receipt of the notification described in subsection (a) to cause the insured depository institution to become adequately capitalized or to enter into an agreement with the appropriate Federal banking agency to cause the insured depository institution to become adequately capitalized, the appropriate Federal banking agency to cause the insured depository institution to become adequately capitalized, the appropriate Federal banking agency shall appoint a conservator for the insured depository institution.

Subsection (d)—Divestiture—If within 90 days of receipt of the notification described in subsection (a), a DFSHC has not caused the depository institution to become adequately capitalized or entered into an agreement acceptable to the appropriate Federal banking agency to cause the insured depository institution to become adequately capitalized, the appropriate Federal banking agency shall order divestiture. The appropriate Federal banking agency may cause the DFSHC to infuse additional capital into the insured depository institution if upon divestiture the insured depository institution would not be adequately capitalized.

Subsection (e)—Termination of Conservatorship; Rescission of Divestiture Order—If after the appointment of a conservator or the issuance of a divestiture order a DFSHC causes the insured depository institution to become adequately capitalized, the appropriate Federal banking agency shall immediately terminate such conservatorship or rescind such order.

Subsection (f)—Aggregate Limit on Required Capital Infusions—The maximum liability of a DFSHC for any capital infusion required by an appropriate Federal banking agency shall not exceed the amounts necessary for the institution to become adequately capitalized.

Subsection (g)—Judicial Review—Within 10 days after the appointment of a conservator or upon receipt of an order of divestiture, the DFSHC may apply to the U.S. District Court for the judicial district in which its principal office is located or the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia for an order requiring the removal of the conservator or for an injunction setting aside, limiting or suspending the enforcement, operation or effectiveness of any such order.

Subsection (h)—Capital of DFSHC—The appropriate Federal banking agency may not impose any requirement pertaining to the capital of the DFSHC. Any agreement entered into pursuant to this section between a DFSHC and an appropriate Federal banking agency with respect to the capital of an undercapitalized insured depository institution subsidiary of such company shall terminate when the institution becomes adequately capitalized.

Section (7)—Additional Provisions Relating to Regulation of Insured Depository Institution Subsidiaries

This section accomplishes two objectives. First, it prohibits adversely differential treatment of DFSHCs and their affiliates, including their insured depository institution affiliates, except as this Act specifically provides. Second, the subsection insures that State and Federal initiatives do not undermine achievement of the purposes of this Act. Whether couched as affiliation, licensing or agency restrictions or as constraints on access to state courts, such laws effectively perpetuate market barriers and deny consumers the opportunity to choose between different financial products and services.

Subsection (a)—Differential Treatment Prohibition—Preempts Federal and State laws, rules, regulations and orders that differentiate between (i) insured depository institutions controlled by a DFSHC from any other insured depository institution in a manner adverse to DFSHC controlled insured depository institutions or (ii) DFSHCs or their affiliates from bank holding companies or savings and loan holding companies and their affiliates in a manner adverse to DFSHCs or their affiliates.

Subsection (b)—Relation to State Law—Preempts State laws that prevent or impede (i) any insured depository institution or affiliate thereof from being affiliated with a DFSHC or (ii) any DFSHC or affiliate thereof from marketing or offering products and services of the DFSHC or any of its affiliates. This preemption does not apply to any State law relating to examination, supervision or regulation of providers of financial services or to the protection of consumers, except to the extent such laws are inconsistent with this section or with the purposes of this Act. Creates a private right of action to declare State laws to be in violation of this section and to enjoin their application.

Subsection (c)—Access to State Courts—Removes a common uncertainty under State licensing and qualification to conduct business statutes which leaves an out-of-state insured depository institution's access to another State's courts unresolved. So long as such an insured depository institution limits its activities to those which do not constitute the establishment or operations of a "domestic branch" in that State, it can qualify to maintain or defend in that State's court any action which could be maintained or defended by a company which is not an insured depository institution and is not located in that State, subject to the same filing, fee and other condition or requirements as may be imposed on such a company.

Subsection (d)—Representatives—Makes clear that a State may not impede or prevent any insured depository institution affiliated with a DFSHC or any DFSHC or affiliate thereof from marketing products and services in that State by utilizing and compensating its agents, solicitors, brokers, employees or other persons located in that State.

Subsection (e)—Affiliate and Control Defined—Contains a special definition of "affiliate" and "control" for purposes of section 7 only. Control is deemed to occur where a person or entity owns or has the power to vote 10% or more of the voting securities of another entity or where a person or entity directly or indirectly determines the management or policies of another entity or person. Unlike the definition of affiliate set forth in section 3, this definition encompasses not only corporate affiliations but affiliations between corporations and individuals.

Section (8)—Insider Lending and Tying Provisions

This section subjects DFSHCs to the tying provisions of section 106 of the Bank Holding Company Act Amendments of 1970 and to the insider lender prohibitions of section 22(h) of the Federal Reserve Act. These actions prohibit abusive tying between products and services offered by insured depository institutions and products and services offered by the DFSHC itself or by any of its other affiliates. The tying restrictions do not apply to products and services that do not involve an insured depository institution. The insider lending provisions severely limit loans by a depository institution to officers and directors of the depository institution. For purposes of both provisions, the appropriate Federal banking agency will exercise the rulemaking authority presently vested in the Federal Reserve with regard to these limitations.

Section (9)—Enforcement and Examination; Payment System Services; Oversight

This section details the jurisdiction and authority of the appropriate Federal banking agencies.

Subsection (a)—Administrative Enforcement—The appropriate Federal banking agency shall enforce this Act by using its examination and supervisory powers.

Subsection (b)—Examination—The appropriate Federal banking agency is empowered to examine or require reports from any affiliate of an insured depository institution controlled by a DFSHC to solely assure compliance with this Act.

Subsection (c)—Federal Reserve Payment Services—All Federal Reserve services shall be available to all insured depository institutions on the same terms and conditions, except in instances that are necessary to avoid a material adverse effect on a large dollar payment system. The Federal Reserve may take enforcement action against an insured depository institution that has engaged in an activity that has resulted in a material adverse affect on a large dollar payment system.

Section (10)—Criminal and Civil Penalties

This section provides for criminal penalties for knowing and willful violations of the provisions of this Act. For companies found to be in violation of the provisions of this section the maximum penalty can be up to $1 million per day for each day that the violation continues.

For individuals found to be in violation of the provisions of this section the penalty shall be a fine and/or a prison term. The maximum fine could be up to $1 million per day for each day during which the violation continues. The maximum prison sentence shall be 5 years. In addition, individuals violating the provisions of this section will also be subject to the penalties provided for in Section 1005 of Title 18 for false entries in any book, report or statement to the extent that the violation included such false entries.

AGAINST HAITIAN INVASION

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Tennessee [Mr. COOPER] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. COOPER. Madam Speaker, evidence is mounting that the administration is planning to invade the country of Haiti while Congress is in the upcoming August recess. I have even heard rumors that troops from Fort Campbell on the Tennessee-Kentucky line already have orders to deploy to Haiti.

We in Congress need to have a full and fair debate on Haiti. I demand a vote before recess on whether the United States should invade Haiti. Already I have cosponsored 2 pieces of legislation which would achieve this objective, H. Con. Res. 269, the Goss-Kyl resolution against using force in Haiti unless American citizens are in clear and present danger; also H. Con. Res. 276, the Skaggs-Boehlert-Durbin resolution, in light of the U.N. resolution allowing use of force to hasten departure of the Haitian military dictatorship, demanding that the President, our President, get congressional approval before intervening militarily.

As the Persian Gulf crisis showed, when a President has time to inform the American people, he needs to do so. He needs to make sure he has the public's support. There is no imminent crisis forcing an invasion now in Haiti. There has been plenty of time to have a full and fair congressional debate.

Mr. President, we need a vote now, and I will vote against invading Haiti.

It is not enough to get U.N. approval as the administration has done. U.N. approval has nothing to do with U.S. approval. American interests must always come first.

I was for U.S. military involvement in the Persian Gulf crisis because there were vital United States interests at stake. The Pentagon supported our involvement there because we could win with minimum U.S. casualties and Saddam Hussein had been using weapons of mass destruction. We also in that instance had great international cooperation.

But I am against an invasion of Haiti. No major national interests are at stake in Haiti and there are no clear reasonable objectives for a military intervention. Even though some United States military experts think that an invasion itself would be relatively simple, building a democratic state in Haiti would take years. The Haitian military leadership is mounting a 2,000-strong civilian paramilitary group not to resist the invasion but to terrorize their fellow citizens. A civil war is likely to result after an invasion. Do we want to be in the middle of Haitian factions fighting each other? Remember, the last time we invaded Haiti, we stayed 19 years. Our Nation surely has higher priorities in the international community than being the world's policeman.

Madam Speaker, Aristide may have been democratically elected, but he seems to be an undemocratic leader. While he was in power in 1991, he flaunted his contempt for the rule of law and for democratic institutions.

Madam Speaker, I would urge the administration to get permission from this country to make sure that we have congressional approval and public support before we invade Haiti, before we use any military force in Haiti. We must ask our President not to take advantage of the congressional recess to start an invasion in Haiti.

WE MUST SAVE THE ASSAULT WEAPONS BAN

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the Speaker's announced policy of February 11, 1994, and June 10, 1994, the gentleman from New York [Mr. NADLER] is recognized for 60 minutes as the majority leader's designee.

Mr. NADLER. Madam Speaker, I yield 5 minutes to the gentleman from Maryland [Mr. HOYER].

SPECIAL COUNSEL IN WHITEWATER INVESTIGATION

Mr. HOYER. Madam Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding me the time.

Madam Speaker, I was saying that we had appointed a special prosecutor and that a number of individuals had raised the issue of replacing Mr. Fiske. They raised the question of conflict of interest. They raised the question not of actual conflict of interest but of perceived conflict of interest. The court panel, Judge Sentelle and his colleagues, decided after the legislation had passed just this past week to replace Mr. Fiske. It is interesting that the court took pains to point out that they did not question either Mr. Fiske's integrity, his ability, or the quality of his investigation.

What they did say, however, was the court, therefore, "deems it in the best interest of the appearance of independence contemplated by the act that a person not affiliated with the incumbent administration be appointed."

Let me reiterate that what they were seeking was to have an appearance of independence. That is to say, there was an allegation that Mr. Fiske knew Mr. Nussbaum, the previous counsel to the White House, when they had both practiced together in New York.

So the court said there might be an appearance of a conflict of interest, an appearance of nonobjectivity, an appearance that perhaps the public would not get what it sought in a special prosecutor, and that is an objective and thorough investigation. That certainly for every American is a worthy objective. But I would think that every American must have been shocked at the action that Judge Sentelle and his colleagues took, because in replacing Mr. Fiske they chose a gentleman, Mr. Starr, who I hasten to add is also a gentleman of good repute, perceived by his colleagues to have high integrity and significant ability.

However, the court purportedly trying to prevent the appearance of bias, appointed somebody who had been a member of the Reagan administration, Solicitor General in the Bush administration, has campaigned for a number of Republican candidates to replace candidates who are Democrats on the basis that they were supporting President Clinton, whose firm, the Washington Post reports, has volunteered on a pro bono bases to represent interests adverse to those of the White House, and a person who quite clearly is a partisan opponent of the President.

Now there may be a lot of partisan opponents of the President and there is nothing wrong with that in a democracy, in a free country. But if in fact we are replacing Mr. Fiske so we can preclude the appearance of bias, to then appoint a very strong opponent of this administration seems to be a strange conclusion indeed of Judge Sentelle and his colleagues that that would preclude the appearance of bias.

Let me go a step further. There are two U.S. Senators who have not in the Senate chamber necessarily, but out in public expressed their deep opposition to the Clinton administration, and indeed in many respects disrespect for and antipathy toward President Clinton and this administration, and I refer to Senator JESSE HELMS and Senator FAIRCLOTH, both of North Carolina. The interesting thing is that Judge Sentelle was appointed to the Federal bench with the strong support of Senator JESSE HELMS. He then participates in appointing Mr. Starr, a strong Republican from Republican administrations to an allegedly objective, independent prosecutor role to investigate President Clinton.

The Washington Post reports further that there have been in recent weeks lunches between Judge Sentelle and Senator FAIRCLOTH, and I do not know whether Senator HELMS was present. Any fair-minded person might say that is certainly all right to have lunch, have discussions, have talks between these folks. But I ask Judge Sentelle, I ask the American people: Is that the appearance of objectivity? Is that the appearance of a lack of bias?

I want to tell my friends that I am surprised that Mr. Starr took this appointment. I am surprised that Mr. Starr, whom I do not know, but as I said has a representation for integrity and intellect, I am surprised that he would take this position. I am surprised that he would not respond to Judge Sentelle and his colleagues: "I believe that the appearance of bias is there, and if you are replacing Mr. Fiske to eliminate that, to appoint a partisan Republican advocate opponent of this administration does not meet, Judge Sentelle, your own test."

It is unfortunate that the judges did not follow their own advice. It is unfortunate the judges were insensitive to the necessity to have the integrity of this system upheld.

Madam Speaker, I will perhaps make further comments in the future as this matter develops. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Ms. BROWN of Florida). The Chair must ask all Members to refrain from personally referring to Members of the Senate by name.

Mr. NADLER. Madam speaker, I rise today because yesterday the National Rifle Association won a victory on the floor of this House which, if not reversed, will result in continued carnage in every city and town across this country. Yesterday opponents of the assault weapons ban contained in the crime bill united to defeat the rule and prevent the crime bill from reaching the floor for a vote.

Too many in this town have predicted that this vote kills any chance of enacting an assault weapons ban this year. I am here today to say that a majority of this House and a majority of the American people support this reasonable, indeed limited and conservative restriction on the private ownership of weapons of war, and hope indeed pray fervently that the assault weapons bill not be dropped from the crime bill when it again comes to the floor of this House.

Madam Speaker, there is a war going on in the streets of America and the bad guys are winning. Frightened parents keep their kids off the street, and some neighborhoods parents make their children sleep in bathtubs because of the fear of drive-by shootings and of heavily armed gangs rampaging in their communities.

The statistics are staggering. Although assault weapons comprise only about one-half of 1 percent of the estimated 211 million privately owned firearms in the United States, they account for roughly 8 percent of all gun crimes, according to the Bureau of Alcohol, Tobacco and Firearms. Eight percent of the gun crimes does not sound like that big a problem, but the fact is that assault weapons are the favorite weapons of professional criminals. The fact is that assault weapons are 16 times more likely to be used in a crime than are other firearms. The fact is that with an assault weapon a criminal is able to discharge more ammunition at a higher velocity with greater accuracy and kill and main more people, and do more damage than with conventional firearms. That is why the drug dealers prefer assault weapons. That is why psychotic mass murderers from Kileen, TX to Stockton, CA to Brooklyn, NY favor assault weapons.

The human toll of these weapons is staggering. As this House considers health care reform, every Member should be aware of the impact of assault weapons.

According to a report by the California attorney general's office:

> The danger of the semiautomatic weapon is not yet the frequency with which it is used in crime or the volume which exists compared to other types of guns. Rather, the danger is the potential each semiautomatic weapon confers upon an individual to kill and wound a large number of people.

The Journal of the American Medical Association made the true impact of assault weapons abundantly clear in June of 1992 when it reported:

> Wounds from high-velocity assault weapons resemble the wounds inflicted in the Vietnam war. They are often multiple and massive, and immediate treatment is critical to survival. High-velocity bullets may set up shock waves and cause cavitation effects resulting in unpredictable damage at sites far from the wound track. With low-velocity weapons, multiple wounds still occur, but the damage is localized to tissues adjacent to the wound track, and the full extent of the injury can usually be determined at the time of surgery. The estimated costs of treating penetrating trauma like that from an assault weapon varies from $15,000 to $20,000. A stay in intensive care is not unusual and may cost as much as $150,000, and patients may require a long rehabilitation. These patients need a tremendous amount of care and can be a tremendous burden on hospitals. Most gunshot-wound patients are not covered by private insurance, and their costs are reimbursed by government insurance programs or are uncompensated. Thus, the public bears a major share of the costs.

The fact is that between 1986 and 1993 an estimated 29,000 assault weapons were used to commit crimes in the United States. This figure includes 1,598 homicides, 940 assaults, 224 robberies, and 4,500 narcotics violations, all committed with assault weapons.

Between 1990 and 1991 assault weapons were used in more than 1,350 crimes in Dallas, and the Los Angeles police seized over 850 assault weapons.

Too often our police officers are outgunned by the criminals. Although assault weapons account for only one-half of 1 percent of all weapons in the country, assault weapons were used in nearly 10 percent of all cop-killings, according to FBI statistics.

Assault weapons are 18 times more likely to be used in a cop-killing than any other type of firearm.

Is it any wonder then that every major national law enforcement organization supports the assault weapons ban? Whom are we to trust, the police who patrol our streets or the unreasoning fanatics of the arrogant gun lobby? Where will the National Rifle Association be when the next child is shot with a military weapon? We know where they will be, not helping that child or the family or the community; they will be in front of the television cameras pointing to the tragedy as proof that the child should have been carrying an AK-47 or a street-sweeper or a Tech 9.

Do not listen to them, and do not be afraid of them. Madam Speaker, we must not give in to the NRA. We must not allow drug dealers and murderers to wreak havoc in our communities. We must stop the killing. We must pass the assault weapons ban. We must not accept any excuses.

This House has already passed it, and it should not be dropped from the crime bill.

Today I am circulating a latter addressed to the Speaker urging that the leadership of this House stand firm on the assault weapons ban, and I urge my colleagues who want to stop the violence to sign this letter. I hope the American people will look to see if their Representatives knuckle under to the strong-arm tactics of the NRA. Let them know that you want your communities back. Let your Representatives know that you do not want to worry about your children every time they walk out the door, every time they go to school, and every time they stand by a window.

Sign the Nadler letter. Speak for the majority of Americans who want safe streets and a ban on assault weapons. Now is the time for action. Now is the time to make our voices heard to begin the process of taking our country back from the criminals.

This country needs a good, rational attack on crime and criminals. This country needs an assault weapons ban. This country needs to stop the killing.

COME TO LOATHE THE MILITARY

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Ms. BROWN of Florida). Under the Speaker's announced policy of February 11, 1994, and June 10, 1994, the gentleman from California [Mr. DORNAN] is recognized for 60 minutes as the designee of the minority leader.

Mr. DORNAN. Madam Speaker, I had mentioned a week ago that on Wednesday and Thursday just past I would be doing two special orders, the first titled "Feeding Christians to the Media Jackals," and the second I had titled ". . . Come To Loathe the Military," a phrase taken from a letter that 23-year-old Bill Clinton wrote when he was avoiding the draft for the third and final time; the third time that a young high school graduate from Arkansas would go into uniform in his place. Clinton had used that expression in a letter to the head of the ROTC in the great State of Arkansas, Col. Eugene Holmes, who had survived the Bataan Death March and later was a colonel in command of the ROTC at the University of Arkansas.

Colonel Holmes' brother Bob had died over the skies of Germany. His remains came back on his Eighth Air Force bomber, and his remains were buried at the cemetery at Cambridge where on my last visit I attempted to find his grave but ran out of time. One of these days I will get back to visit the grave of Bob Holmes.

I hoped during the break, Madam Speaker, to visit with Colonel Holmes himself.

In that Clinton letter to Holmes dated December 3, 1969, Clinton had used that expression that he and other young people in that period, because of Vietnam, had come to loathe the military. They made the mistake of blaming our men, now our young women, in uniform for the political policies set by this country.

The letter that I think of when I say the "Holmes letter" was the letter that Colonel Holmes wrote to all of us—the American people—in mid-September of 1992 telling the Nation, advising the Nation, "Do not vote for his Governor," then-Governor Bill Clinton, because Clinton "did not have the patriotism or the integrity to be the President of the United States." These are the words of the Bataan Death March survivor, who had over 20 men die in his arms, who endured over 3 years of horrible captivity on a major island of the Philippines, and whose younger brother died on a bombing mission against Adolf Hitler's Third Reich.

FEEDING CHRISTIANS TO THE MEDIA JACKALS

I want to split my special order tonight, but I am going to start off, and

I know Colonel Holmes would approve of this, Madam Speaker, with my theme of "Feeding Christians to the Media jackals," because I introduced a piece of legislation today, House Resolution 519. I have 28 original cosponsors.

On this very day, our former Republican whip who is now serving as a distinguished U.S. Senator from the great State of Mississippi, TRENT LOTT, has introduced companion legislation identical in the Senate.

My House Resolution 519, I have it before me, I will read it and then I will discuss it.

But before I do, I want to discuss again briefly some of the great history of our House.

Almost certainly, if Joseph Kennedy II had survived the Second World War, he would have come to Congress rather than his younger brother, Jack. Today, August 12, is the 50th anniversary of the death of Joseph Patrick Kennedy, the oldest son of the nine children of Joseph Kennedy, Sr.

Let me read just very briefly how Joseph Kennedy gave his life for his Nation 50 years ago today and quickly mention some other spots around the world where young Americans were giving what Abraham Lincoln so beautifully called the "full measure of devotion," their mortal lives.

On this day, Navy Lt. (jg.) Joseph P. Kennedy, the older brother of Senator TED KENNEDY and Senator Robert Kennedy, two sisters, Rosemary and Kathleen, and John F. Kennedy, soon-to-be Congressman, Senator, President, and then assassinated in the 46th year of his life.

Joe Kennedy took off from Great Britain in a 4-engine aircraft known as a Privateer. Most of us would recognize it as a B-24 Liberator, the bomber that our Treasury Secretary Lloyd Bentsen and former Senator George McGovern flew in combat.

But the Navy version of the B-24 Liberator had an extremely large high profile single tail, and the Navy called it a Privateer. It was a big 4-engine bomber.

They loaded this airplane with high explosives, dynamite to the layman, from bow to stern and put on it exotic radio-controlled equipment.

Having bailed out of military planes twice in peacetime, I can assure you when you bail out there is a great risk of life. You wonder if you are going to make it. Joe Kennedy had never bailed out in his life from an aircraft, civilian or military. And he was going to bail out of this big aircraft with his copilot—usually they would have a crew of 10. I am afraid I did not look up the name of this young copilot who died with Joe Kennedy. Kennedy was going to get this airplane over the English Channel, and even in summertime, it was pretty risky going across that channel. They were going to bail out of this aircraft once it had been guided by radio experimental controls toward the German submarine pens. They were to bail out and be rescued after they had launched this massive flying bomb, 4-engine bomber that of course would be destroyed when it flew right into the target.

Something went wrong, some tiny little spark, and Joe Kennedy and his courageous volunteer copilot, their remains were atomized somewhere over the English Channel, his fate known only to God, after they had lost radio contact.

He gave his life for his country in that struggle.

Life-and-death struggles were going on all over Brittany and the Normandy Peninsula.

The great George S. Patton, 3-star general at that time, had just broken out. He had run 35 miles yesterday, 50 years ago, and had taken a left turn and was about to close the Phalaise gap, which he came within a hair's breadth of doing, and maybe shortening the war, trapping an entire German army, an army that had been fighting since D-day in Normandy. In Brittany he had reached out his forces, particularly the 5th Armored Division, which adopted a very simple nickname, "Victory." The Victory Division was in the front, one of the spearhead units. We had crossed the beautiful Loire Valley, that beautiful chateau country. He had taken Nante and the French ports along Brittany. I only learned last night, reading something that I had never seen anywhere, that we never did conquer the German-held French ports of St. Milo and Lorean. They stayed German property until March 1945. Imagine how the areas around those citadels were littered with the bodies of young American infantrymen and armored artillery officers and men. We did take within a few days Brest and some of the other ports along there. And of course used those ports again to build up Patton's 3d Army and the 1st Army to make the final thrust across the Rhine in the dead of the worst winter, 50 years ago in March 1945.

What we always forget, and I have said this on the floor 4 or 5 times already in the last month, is the other struggles that were going on.

British forces took one of the most beautiful places in the world and liberated it today. They crossed the Arno yesterday into Florence and today they took the northern suburbs of Florence, 50 years ago today. The Russian Army, where more people were killed in combat than ever in history and probably ever again—God willing we never got ourselves into a nuclear conflict. In the South Pacific, in Guam, with the loss of almost 3,000 American lives and 17,000 Japanese lives, Guam was finally secure—secure except for the hundreds of Japanese that went into the jungle and fought on, not until just the end of the war, but fought on for years. One of them, one of the last survivors, turning himself in finally 27 years later in 1972. But Guam was safe enough to start building those B-29 bases to bring Japanese Imperial warlords to a position of unconditional surrender in August and to sign a peace treaty September 2 of 1945.

I hope to be a U.S. Congressman next year at not only Iwo Jima's 50th anniversary on February 23 but there in Tokyo Harbor on September 2 for the 50th anniversary of the signing of that great end to a ghastly, horrible slaughter of 55 million human beings. Yes this is quite a date in history.

May I put in here some notes of important meetings going on that turned out to be Communist lies.

Churchill, 50 years ago today, was in the recently liberated city of southern France. And he was there meeting with Yugoslav leader Josip Tito and the royalist prime minister of the kind of put together from World War I the false state of Yugoslavia. That prime minister was Irvan Subasic. Tito swore that he would not impose a Communist Government on Yugoslavia. Tito was probably a Croat, mostly with Serbian support. Preying on and eventually executing Radij Mihalevic, he says, "I am not a communist, and there will be no communist government," in lies to the great Winston Churchill, lies to his face. I repeat the British Army, 8th Army, driving the Germans out of the Italian city of Fiorenzi, or Florence. By the way, Joseph Kennedy's mission was called Aphrodite. I wonder if that is taught in schools about the first of the Kennedy brothers who died violently serving his country. It is interesting that Joe's death came 1 year and 11 days after John F. Kennedy's PT boat was cut in half, when he lost two of his men, and he won the Navy Cross by swimming to the Tuculumbungara Island with his life preserve on one of his burned enlisted crew members in his teeth. Kennedy picked up there a painful back injury from the Japanese destroyer cutting him in half that gave him great pain until the day he was assassinated in Dallas 20 years and some months later—back pain from his service in World War II.

Now what was happening to George Bush, our last immediate President, the 41st President of the United States? This week, 50 years ago, George Bush flew his 41st, 42nd and 43rd combat missions, building up to September 2, when he bailed out for the second time. That time he lost both his crew members. The first time he ditched, and both were saved; that was his 48th combat mission. He went back, and, after his second bail out, he had every right to be sent back stateside. They offered it to him. He had just done 30 days of unexpected submarine duty when the lifeguard submarine had picked him up. He was depth charged in that sub, had combat missions under the water, and he said, "No, I'm going back to my ship, the San Jacinto," and he flew ten more combat missions. But this was the week in the Marianas, bombing Iwo Jima, Chi Chi Jima, that George Bush got missions 41, 42 and 43.

Cut that half a century in half. Where was Clinton 25 years ago today? Meeting with the pro-Hanoi movement to set up those coordinated demonstrations that he would lead in England while they were being led here by his friends, David Metzger and the deputy, No. 2 man at the State Department today, Strobe Talbott—all that pro-Hanoi gang. They were working on dual objectives for Clinton, crush and suppress his draft notice in which he was ordered to show up July 28 of 1969. He had that crushed, reversed, undone. I had never heard of that in my life before or since. Right to this day, never heard of that. And now he was spending all of August getting ready for the demonstrations in Europe and was about to head back at the end of this month, 25 years ago, to Oxford where all the evidence indicates he never went to class, never stood for his June exams and, thereby, never got his degree until they gave him the honorary one at the end of the week-long photo opportunity period during the 50th anniversary at Normandy.

So, that was what was going on 25 years ago. By the way, 25 years ago in Vietnam the 101st Airborne was still mourning its wounded from the battles in Hamburger Hill; the mini Tet offensive of September before was 11 months old. They were expecting another, a third, Tet offensive. That summer it never materialized, and it was Nixon's first year. His secret plan to end the war in Vietnam was not to be implemented until 3 years later when Nixon had watched another 15,000 or more lives squandered in Vietnam. That is why this Republican was never a fan of Nixon's conduct of the war. Our POWs were at about the half point in numbers. Some of them had already been there. As I said, Alvarez was shot down 30 years ago this month on August 5, and so he was at the halfway point of his—beyond the halfway point of his captivity, but hundreds more were to be taken in this off-again, on-again, uncertain struggle.

And, as I have said on this floor, and I will say it until the day I die, Vietnam was no different than France, no different than New Guinea, no different than Iwo Jima, no different than France on the first go-around in 1918. It was American men from the same type of family, the same type of background, the same kind of patriotic conservative upbringing, the same men that fought in Desert Storm. These are all the same families, the same middle class background, with a few heroic, young, nobless oblige kids from wealthy families, and some poor kids generally, but they were the lucky ones because most poor kids were rejected by the draft board because they did not have a sufficient education to serve.

Remember 18,000,000 people were called by our draft board in World War II, and 6,000,000 of them were told—6,000,000—"We don't need you. You're not physically strong enough. You weren't fed well enough when you were young, and you don't have a sufficient education to even enter the Army as a G.I. doughboy, grand M-1 rifle-toting infantryman."

So, that is the background of my remarks today about what those men fought for.

As a young kid in the Second World War, I remember the Saturday Evening Post magazine's coming out with those Norman Rockwell paintings of Freedom of Speech, Freedom of Religion, Freedom from Want and Freedom from Fear. So, if I were doing a separate special order and starting out now, I would have ended the one called "Come to Loath the Military," and I would now be starting a special order entitled, "Feeding Christians to the Media Jackals."

Madam Speaker, here is my House Res. 519:

Mr. DORNAN submitted the following resolution, and in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, those people on C-Span that may want to look at it up in the library in their hometown that carries the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, and most do, they will get the list of 28 cosponsors. I expect to have 150 before we adjourn here someday in the first week in October. Here is the resolution, which is also being introduced on the Senate side today, I repeat, by a great Senator from Mississippi, TRENT LOTT.

The resolution expresses the sense of the House of Representatives regarding religious intolerance:

> Whereas the rights, liberties and freedoms derived from the Constitution of the United States are guaranteed to all citizens regardless of their religious beliefs or affiliations; and whereas individuals of all religious denominations have made substantial contributions to the establishment, preservation and protection of the system of government of the Nation; now, therefore, be it resolved that, one, the House of Representatives strongly opposes anti-Christians bigotry and all forms of religious intolerance and condemns all manifestations and expressions of religious bigotry and intolerance; two, the House condemns individuals and organizations that foster intolerance, suspicion, hatred or fear of individuals who, A, hold values rooted in religious tenet; B, participate in the political process to ensure that the laws of the Nation reflect such values; C, advocate public policies that are respectful of such values; and, D, it shall be the policy of the House to seek to ensure that the rights of individuals to participate in the political process of the Nation are not infringed on the basis of their religious beliefs or affiliations.

Now, what motivated me, Madam Speaker, to have our legislative counsel draft this, I believe, important resolution? And what causes us to reaffirm what, when I was a young kid, was part of the whole American fabric of life, a respect for all religions? Well, it was, I am sorry to say, my friend, the gentleman from California [Mr. FAZIO], one of the Democrat leaders and deputy chair of the Democrat conference.

I came to this House on my first go-around in 1976. VIC came 2 years later. He is a decade younger than I am, but I remember him over by that leadership desk in January of 1979 with little blond and red-headed children. They looked like my children just a few years before, and I went over and introduced myself, and I said, "Boy, can I borrow some of these kids? They're just duplicates of mine, only a couple of decades younger."

The gentleman from California [Mr. FAZIO] and I have always, always had nothing but the most cordial of relations during our whole time here in Congress. I assume with that good paisano name, FAZIO, that he might be a fellow Roman Catholic. So I asked him and he said no, that he was Episcopalian or something, and I said, "Well, great," I said, "I'm glad to have you on board from northern California. This is an exciting time to be serving our country."

Since that time, I have crossed swords with the gentleman from California [Mr. FAZIO] in debate on this floor only once. He apparently did not know that Kate Michaelman had admitted publicly in Senate testimony that she had aborted her fourth child—it was her first abortion, the other three daughters were born alive—and that she was a Catholic, and had done it with a heavy heart. Kate Michaelman is now the spokesperson for NARAL, the National Abortion Rights Action League. I had mentioned this fact on the floor of the House. Mr. FAZIO thought I was revealing some personal secret of hers. He took me on, I took him on, and on a point of personal privilege we resolved the matter. It is the only time we crossed verbal swords in this House. But I think my pal from California, VIC FAZIO, is walking on very slippery ground when he goes down to the National Press Club and talks about firebreathing Christians and gives egregious, and I cannot believe sincere, advice, to my party, the party that he is in opposition to here 90 percent of the time. He held a press conference to suggest that Republicans must purge from our party all firebreathing Christians who have entered politics because they are worried about the cultural meltdown, the moral decline and the degradation, and what the prior speaker, the gentleman from New York [Mr. NADLER] said, the bad guys and gals winning in the streets of our Nation, tearing our young people apart.

We cannot demonize, and that is a word that the New York Times and the Washington Post and the L.A. Times have commented on. We cannot demonize the marginalize people in our country whose primary obligation as they see it is to raise stalwart young men and women and to pass on to them the verities that they learned at their mothers' knees, that were reinforced by their dads and by their school teachers.

I can remember the first thing I had to write in my binder as a Air Force preflight aviation cadet was we hold these truths to be self-evident, and that all men are created equal. And I remember taking my soft plastic binder, and with a ball point pen, embedding into it, with a firm reliance on divine providence, we mutually pledge our lives, our fortunes, and our sacred honor. And those very words that were signed by 56 early American forefathers, many of which gave up their fortunes, and some of them gave up their sacred lives, and none of them gave up their honor.

There is Moses' face in this chamber, the only one of the 23 large marble medallions of lawmakers that is other than a left or right profile. It starts with Moses, the keystone, the lodestar, dead center, looking right down at you, Madam Speaker, and over your head are the words "In God we trust."

We are not going to strip out of our country our religious heritage.

I spent my 30th year proudly watching JOHN LEWIS, the distinguished gentleman from Georgia, up there on that stage with Martin Luther King, speaking on that great August day, 31 years ago, it is amazing, August 28th, 1963.

JOHN and I are the only two Members of this Chamber or the U.S. Senate who were present to hear Martin Luther King give his speech, "I have a dream." And that speech is the only words of Martin King, Reverend King, that supersedes his great words in his letter from a Birmingham jail, where he said, "The laws of God supersede every law of man."

I suppose the Democrats are so desperate this election year that they will try anything to hang onto their majority. My gosh, the Democrats have controlled this place for 40 years, since I was too young to vote. In my first election, I was 21 then, I was in pilot training in Florida—no, I moved to Texas for jet training by that time, and everybody I voted for in California by absentee ballot lost. Jim Wright got elected in November of 1954, Eisenhower lost the House and the Senate, and it was only his second year. We have sat on this side of the aisle ever since. We have never had anything but minority loyal opposition on this side of the aisle. We are in our 40th year. We will come close, but I wouldn't put money that we will take it. And if Republicans do not take over Congress, the Democrats will continue to have liberals running the leadership positions and every committee for the 41st and 42nd year in a row. Totally unknown, that type of domination of one party in the first 150 years of our Nation's history.

And now, the Democrats are trying to save themselves from losing more than the average 14 seats. They may lose 20 seats. They may lose 30 seats. This conduct comes up, we might just have a seat change and turn this place upside down. We will move to that side of the aisle, and maybe in my last 2 years I will get to be Speaker pro tempore, standing up there and looking eloquent like you, Madam Speaker, which I have never done in 18 years of tenure around this place. Anything can happen.

But I will give my friend VIC, and he is my friend, the same warning that I gave my classmate from 1976, AL GORE, who is now the Vice President of the United States. I gave it to him to the right, of that door here, when he said Hi to me, warmly one morning, We have got good relations. And he had with him the prime minister of Ukraine. He introduced me to the prime minister.

I said AL, let me talk to you a second. I crossed that door, spoke to him by that half a pillar on the Republican side, I said AL, VIC FAZIO is giving my party advice. I don't know whether to take it seriously, about kicking activist Christians out of my party because they control the State organizations in six States. That kind of makes me happy. But let me give you some real advice. AL, we don't want a battle over religious belief. I said AL, are you aware that Mother Theresa is not part of the political religious left? She is certainly not the nonbelieving pagan left in this country. She is not the country-club-Republican atheist right in this country. And she is not part of the National Council of Churches, that doesn't know where they stand one month to next. Mother Theresa is part of the conservative religious right. And I said AL, so is Pope John Paul II, who you have met with twice.

This is the religious right. What you are taking on would be one-quarter of this country. Because I speak for the majority of my church. I am in the mainstream of my faith. I may not agree with my bishops over certain forms of gun control or Central America or capital punishment or universal medical care—all of those are optionable beliefs in my faith.

But the sacredness of human life, growing in a woman's womb, the sacredness of that life with an immortal soul for all of eternity infused into it by God the Creator Himself? That belief is not optionable.

And when I hear that nine Members of this House go to a meeting yesterday, right here in our own building, guarded by nine Capitol Hill police in case something untoward happened—to a meeting of a task force called the Radical Right Task Force, it struck me that every caucus in this House, funded or not funded, usually has a positive purpose. For strong rational defense, for instance. Or the Hispanic Caucus. We are allowed to belong to that, even if we are not Hispanic. I am a southern Californian. I love Hispanic history in my adopted State. The Arts Caucus, I am on that even though I get on the floor here and get angry at certain NEA grants squandering our good taxpayers' money for pornography or blasphemy. I am in the Grace Caucus. We have got all these caucuses focused on a positive good.

I cannot recall—may find an exception over the weekend—of a task force or caucus ever formed in this House like the one that Mr. FAZIO that is focused on one group of people because of their religious beliefs.

Now, to be sure, that whole group would say, oh, we are not talking about the Pope or Mother Theresa or your run-of-the-mill average loyal or disloyal Catholic.

We are not talking about mainstream Protestant designations. We are not even talking about smaller Protestant groups like Christian Scientists or Mormons. We are talking about fundamentalists. That is the word they use in all of these fire-breathing press releases of theirs.

Fundamentalists. That word has taken on a terrifying meaning in Iran. It has taken on a terrifying meaning, when that is the way the general media describes terrorists who blow up the second and third tallest buildings in the world after the Chicago Sears Tower, it is the Trade Twin Towers in New York. Blowing them up, five people dead, a sixth dies horribly in pain with lung failure weeks later. Six people dead, 1,000 injured by people called radical fundamentalists.

I know that VIC never makes a move, nor does Mr. Clinton, without these focus groups, without this garbage of putting people in a theater somewhere and getting touchy-feely buzzers, to press a button every time they ask them a test question.

And boy, when those focus groups or pollsters tell you this is up or this is down, then you come out with this bizarre attack on fundamentalist Christians who have tended to avoid politics as Caesar's world. All my adult life, how many groups I have spoken to begging them to come into the political process so they can have home school for their child and keep their young daughter innocent and try to teach their son to live up to the same standard of chasteness and decency that they are asking of his sisters. And then when they turn that son out into the angry, dangerous, violent and drug-ridden streets, they can expect that their son or daughter not to have their family values trampled upon. These people must come into the marketplace and get involved, they must make sure that Mosaic law and Christian principle and Jesus Christ's golden rule is written into law in this Chamber.

The dumbest, the most ignorant remark I have ever heard in my life is, you cannot legislate morality. What an asinine half-truthful statement. What that purports to mean is you cannot legislate morality in somebody's heart, which is an organ that we use to indicate the sensitive reasoning of brain power. You cannot do that.

But all law is a form of legislative morality. If not, why do we have St. Gregory over this door? Why do we have St. Alphonse over the other door, St. Edward the Confessor, St. Lewis, whose mother said, "I would rather have my son dead at my feet than have him commit one grievous mortal sin." Why do we have Moses up here? Why do we have the great rabbi who rewrote all the Talmudic law, a genius, Maimonides, writing in 11th century Spain.

Oh, we have got some losers up here like Napoleon, but we still have his Napoleonic law. We have people who did not belong to any specific religion but who certainly believed in God, like Thomas Jefferson. I tend to believe that he was a sincere man when he wrote, with a firm reliance on divine province. He meant every word of it.

Hammurabi, with his dark sides and did some killing. There are Greek and Roman people up there like Solon and Justinian who had their dark moments. But we have got Suleiman. We have got saints up on these walls. All law is a form of legislative morality.

It is easy to take down the tablets of Moses. Just off the top of my head, I remember when I was traveling against child pornography 3 years before I came here, finding the tablets on the front lawn of the courthouse in Duluth, MN, up in Lake Superior, in the capital city of Nevada. Are they still there? I did not know there were tablets on the wall of the third floor in the Montgomery County, MD, courthouse where the ACLU is trying to rip them down.

When Moses wrote, thou shalt not kill, did he say, you cannot defend yourself in uniform if you are a police officer, a police woman, in the military, a fighter pilot in the skies? No. He meant killing, murdering, immorally. But then we took his commandment and turned it into first-degree murder, second-degree murder, third-degree murder, voluntary manslaughter.

When he says, thou shalt not steal, did he foresee Bunco? Did he foresee a rip-off televangelist minister, a disgrace to religion, focused on greed and money, giving a bad name to religion but disappearing quickly, destroying themselves. They always do. Did he think about pickpocketing or, I said bunco artists, armed robbery, burglary, carjacking, home invasion? We are learning terms like carjacking and home invasion that we not even dreamed of when I first arrived in this Chamber. We have codified all of those stealing fever laws under mosaic commandments, thou shalt not steal.

When he says thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's wife, does that mean you could do it if you were a lesbian and she was separated from her husband? No, we do not have all that codification. It says basically, thou shalt not commit adultery and thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's wife. And it is left up to men and women of good will, with the guidance of religious leaders and lawmakers of principle, to decide what should be in the law and what should be taken care of by our hearts.

We know that there has not been a single person ever maybe in this Chamber, we left it to the States, who have tried to pass any laws against easy, quick, no-fault, cheap lying divorce. Never going to be adjudicated in my lifetime. I have never even thought of writing a law. But we know that quick, easy divorce, where children are involved is causing those angry streets out there. It turns into the community deserted children.

I do not like the term "dead beat dad." It may both start with a D and have a little alliteration to it, but dead beat dad sounds far too cute to me. This is a deserting, rotten person who brought children into the world and then ditches them and, so he can keep his Mercedes-Benz payments, does not contribute to the education of the children, let alone the funding of how they live and how they eat.

We all know when we study divorce that it turns loose a man. And unless he is a person of particular courage who becomes that Sunday visiting dad, his income goes up and the woman's income goes rock bottom and a life of terrible pain and struggle begins. That is for the States to decide and really for a change, a sea change of heart in culture, in our society.

The abortion battle is going to be with us forever, forever, because it is like slavery. It involves life. You cannot steal a human being's life and lock them up, as with a slave, and that can never be accomplished without turmoil and bringing a curse on your society. And you can never snuff out a human being's heartbeat in the womb of its mother and zero line its brain wave. You cannot ever do that. And that brain wave starts, that heartbeat starts at day 18, about, and the brain wave, by day 40, is established. You can never snuff that out without having this always a matter of public concern.

I tell my friend Vic that when he reads editorials like this in the New York Times or a front-page story, he better run from this. Here is the New York Times, June 3d. This is the paper that gave Vic Fazio some of these ideas. Conservative Christians have burst into view this year as an important, often divisive force in Republican politics. They now have control of six State organizations and are making inroads into several others. Front page. The mother paper of America.

Here is an editorial in the New York Times 4 days later:

"Many of the retrograde forces that brought us the ugliest Republican National Convention in recent memory," I was there. I did not see this festival of hate and fear. I saw some speeches I did not agree with, but it was dominant media culture, 95 percent liberal at the top of the networks, the three biggest papers in the country, they put this hate and fear spin on my Republican convention with a darn good platform.

It says, "The retrograde forces that brought us this national, ugliest national convention of recent memory have now conspired to nominate Oliver Lawrence North for the United States Senate in Virginia." That became a fait accompli.

"Mr. North's startling ascendancy is ominous evidence that the GOP remains vulnerable to the foot soldiers of fundamentalism."

Listen to this paragraph from my brilliant young friend, William Crystal.

"This month marks an important and alarming development in the politics of American religion." The month he is talking about is June. "As the influence in the Republican Party of 'fervent Christians' emerges as the hottest trendy story and talk show topic of the summer." And it persists, 2 months later. Why should just now there be all this dark talk about this subject is an interesting question.

The answer is not, despite what the Times suggest, that the religious right has "taken over" one of our two national parties and that our civil liberties, therefore, hang in the balance. It is by no means clear, in fact, that the influence of religious conservatives has increased much at all over the past many months.

We remember a front-page Washington Post story reporting significant Christian coalition participation in the Republican politics in more than half a dozen States a year ago. That story presumably about the same States featured with such drama not 2 weeks ago in the Times was in fact in September 1992.

□ 1620

Madam Speaker, at this point let me look for another few key articles to put in here. I was over here at St. Peter's on the Hill, St. Joseph's on the Senate side, St. Peter's on the House side, and here, just like many churches, only a block away from what used to be, and I would like to think still is, the heart of the District of Columbia.

Madam Speaker, in the back of the church I picked up the standard Archdiocesan newspaper for this area of the country called the Catholic Standard. The senior publisher of this would be, of course, the Archbishop, James Cardinal Hickey.

Madam Speaker, I read in here in a front-page story that many of my colleagues are distraught at the role the Catholic Church is now playing in politics vis-a-vis the health debate. Leaders in the Catholic Church are demanding that there not be coverage of abortion on demand for any reason under the sun, or no reason whatsoever, for all 9 months, right up until 1 microsecond before labor begins. That is the Roman Catholic Church's stand.

I read on the cover that my friend and colleague, the gentlewoman from Colorado [PATRICIA SCHROEDER], is really upset with that, that the church is making these statements. She says that, "The church is now going to undermine women's health care needs."

That is my colleague, the gentlewoman from New York [NITA LOWEY], a Democrat from New York. She insisted that the church is using health care reform to repeal Roe versus Wade. No, it is not. It is a separate debate, although, of course, the church would like to repeal Roe versus Wade. I would, too. After all, the whole case was based on lies.

Madam Speaker, the name for the young woman, Roe, was a lie. She never was raped. She made it up. Whoever heard of a Supreme Court decision that significant and far-reaching based on a foul lie? She simply was not raped, and had that baby anyway. It was her third attempt at abortion.

The woman who uses this pseudonym, Roe, has three daughters, all grown up, in their twenties. They have never met, as far as I know. The daughters would like to reconcile, but they said, "Not until our mother says she is happy that she did not get to kill all three of us." That is the Roe in Roe versus Wade. The Wade was the district attorney in the State of Texas.

Madam Speaker, the gentleman from California [DON EDWARDS], who is in his last months; in just 88 days is the election, when he will be replaced in this Chamber; DON EDWARDS says, joining the debate, "I especially resent the fact that certain religious groups are entering this political fight here in Congress." He resents that fact? Certain religious groups? Come on, DON, you mean Catholic, Roman Catholic Church.

If you want to be a know-nothing, like the people that got a rowboat and took a carved stone that the Vatican had sent for our Washington Monument, and took it out in the middle of the Potomac and dumped it, where it remains to this day, and that kind of know-nothing shut down the building of the Washington Monument for the better part of several decades; if you want to be a know-nothing about the Catholic Church, go ahead, take it on, DON.

Madam Speaker, the landscape of history for the better part of 1,900 years is littered with the forgotten and demeaned reputations of people who took on Holy Mother Church, or religion in general.

Let us have a debate about that some day. That is a good subject for our Oxford debate, casting the fire-breathing right to the media jackals. It would come up with a softer title than that.

Madam Speaker, here is a great lady that I have only had the opportunity to meet once, Helen Alvare, of the Life Issues Forum under the National Conference of Bishops. She says, "The best antidote (in addition to prayer, for the graces of dignity and holding your temper) is a good dose of the truth."

With that preamble, this spokeswoman for the Life Issues Forum of the Catholic Church takes apart these false claims. She says, "One of the claims is that the church is trying to take away what women presently have in private insurance." According to Alvare, "Virtually everyone who supports abortion mandates in health reform has claimed that most women have private insurance coverage of abortion. They say that unless abortion is 'a basic benefit,'" and it is, in the Gephardt and Mitchell health care reform plans, and of course, Clinton or Clinton-light or Hillary Clinton health care plan, all this abortion coverage is in there, making all of us pay for what we believe is the flat-out killing, and in some cases, in the cases of these abortionist doctors who kill 32 or more a day, knowledgeable, knowledgeable murder of innocent human life; not all of them, I guess there have to be stupid abortion doctors out there with a totally twisted and malformed conscience.

She goes on to say that is not a proven fact at all, and mandating abortion in every policy in this country. Not so, she says. "There is no conclusive proof that most private policies now cover abortion. Even if the claim were true, it would be irrelevant. What people can freely choose to buy or not buy" in abortion insurance coverage today "is no argument for forcing them under penalty of law to buy it tomorrow."

Then again, in answering my distinguished colleagues, the gentlewoman from New York [Mrs. LOWEY] and the gentlewoman from Colorado [Mrs. SCHROEDER] and the gentleman from California [Mr. EDWARDS], she goes on to say, "If those who claim they only want to preserve the 'status quo' were honest," said Alvare, "they would insist that health care reform preserve people's ability to choose whether to buy abortion insurance. They would never insist that abortion be a 'basic benefit' that every person must own."

Then here is myth, too, that she explodes. "Another claim is that the church," and this speakes for most Christian denominations, "does not want women to benefit from health reform. This was the premise of Schroeder's argument as she harshly accused the church of plotting to harm women's health interests under cover of removing abortion mandates from health care. The Congresswoman included 'osteoporosis' in her list of woman's services and diseases targeted for destruction in the church's 'plot.'

"In reality," comes back Mrs. Alvare, "the church has been in the forefront of efforts to promote access and quality services for women. Our hospitals," over 1,2000 of them, "provide care to millions of women every year. And our respect life agenda includes both support for healing and opposition to killing.

"That is why * * * the church opposes legislation that would force individual abortion coverage, force Catholic hospitals into business relationships with abortionists, and force communities," and this includes Lutheran hospitals, "to open unwanted abortion clinics." She emphasized the word "force" in the statement.

As an aside, Alvare added, "The church thinks women deserve really good," excellent, "treatment for osteoporosis."

The argument that the bishops are really trying to overturn Roe versus Wade admittedly tries Alvare's patience. "It is legally impossible for Federal health care legislation to overturn Supreme Court decisions," she says firmly. "Roe could be overturned only by a constitutional amendment" or another whole group of flesh-and-blood people on the Supreme Court, people who have maybe had a life, unlike Justice Souter, who indicated one thing and votes the other, which so often happens with appointees to the Supreme Court.

She closes, "Unfortunately, Roe is the law. It made abortions legal on demand," for all 9 months, for any reason at all, "but a health insurance bill that mandates abortion coverage would go much," much, much "further. It would force abortion into the private lives of every family, every health provider, every community, and every taxpayer."

Alvare notes that if abortion is eliminated from the basic benefits package and made available as a supplemental benefit, abortion-on-demand is sadly going to remain legal but the rest of us will not have to subsidize other people's decisions to kill their young in their womb.

Still another claim floating around the Halls of Congress is that the bishops are really trying to impose their religious values on everyone. Yeah, they're really having luck with that, aren't they? "Does this one sound familiar?" she asks. Every time an identifiable Catholic or Catholic institution speaks up in the public square about abortion, someone else raises this question.

She suggested practicing the following response in front of a mirror. She is recommending looking in a mirror for EDWARDS and LOWEY and PAT SCHROEDER. Look in a mirror, without a hint of impatience in your voice, and say this to yourself:

Being for unborn life is not a religious perspective, but a moral one shared by millions of Americans, religious and nonreligious. Opposition to government coerced involvement with abortion—China—is shared by even more millions. Poll after poll shows it. American women and men do not want universal insurance coverage with abortion mandates.

The final phony, false, lying claim is that the church really wants to make contraception illegal. I have never heard a sermon on making contraception illegal in the 45 years of my life since I was a middle teenager, not that I even heard it then, as anything but for the faithful.

She noted, Mrs. Alvare, that contraception is an important moral issue but she makes this key distinction: It does not kill human life, which abortion does. In the area of contraception, the church is seeking conscience protections but not seeking to make it illegal or unavailable.

She pointed out that much of the rhetoric by prochoice advocates is a way to deflect attention from the truth.

"People don't lie about you or your arguments if they have good arguments themselves." Well said, Mrs. Alvare.

Look, what I see here is a veiled attack, marginalizing and demonizing born-again, charismatic, evangelical, protestant Christians in order to try and cripple, intimidate, or to scare orthodox and traditional Jews, Serbian orthodox, Greek orthodox, Armenian orthodox, Russian orthodox, eastern orthodox, Greed orthodox, and traditional loyal orthodox Roman Catholics. By hitting at these groups that they think in their little focus groups do not have the clout to fight back, they think they can accomplish a major objective and save about 20 seats that they are probably going to lose in the coming election 88 days from this very day.

I would say for the sanity and the comity and the well-being and the decency of debate and discourse in this Chamber, do not proceed with your battle plans, Task Force on Radical Right. JIM MORAN was in the well right today when I used his name as having been at this 9-policemen-guarded opening meeting yesterday, chaired by LOUISE SLAUGHTER. Do not do this.

I close, Madam Speaker and let my time clock run out on this: Intelligent, lovely black lady columnist Adrienne T. Washington that I read occasionally in the Washington Times, the headline of her article from this week, 3 days ago, August 9, caught my eye. It says ACLU Censors the Ten Commandments. I will start reading it and I will include it in the RECORD in its entirety:

For decades a 3-by-4-foot bronze plaque with a centuries-old message has blended into the brickwork of the Montgomery County Courthouse. It's been around so long it hangs virtually unnoticed.

But no longer.

The ACLU wants the plaque of the Ten Commandments taken down from its perch on the third floor of the Judicial Center in Rockville.

Is Moses next, the author of those commandments? I would guess so, in the long run. Do they not have more significant causes to champion?

Madam Speaker, you will find the rest of her article compelling reading.

Her last words are:

Those 10 commandments are a necessary reminder, something we can learn from, if not aspire to. It should stay right where it is as just one expression, one example, of what a whole lot of people believe it takes to truly live free in today's topsy-turvy world.

Madam Speaker, I include the Washington Times article for the RECORD, as follows:

ACLU CENSORS THE TEN COMMANDMENTS

(By Adrienne T. Washington)

For decades a 3-by-4-foot bronze plaque with a centuries-old message has blended into the brickwork of the Montgomery County Courthouse. It's been around so long it hangs virtually unnoticed.

The American Civil Liberties Union wants the plaque of the Ten Commandments taken down from its perch on the third floor of the Judicial Center in Rockville, saying it violates the First Amendment separation of church and state.

Don't they have more significant causes to champion?

Arthur Spitzer, legal director of the Montgomery County chapter of the ACLU, told reporter Arlo Wagner of The Washington Times that the plaque should be removed "because the government should not be telling people to observe the Sabbath," among other religious teachings.

How ludicrous. Mr. Spitzer is wrong. If ever there was a place to hang the Ten Commandments, it's in the so-called hallowed halls of blind justice. Here, humankind may welcome a little divine guidance along with a little divine intervention.

Most of the criminal codes and civil laws of Western civiliazation are based on the Judeo-Christian ethics espoused in the Ten Commandments. Besides, what about the other First Amendment rights that guarantee free speech and the right to religious freedom?

Wiping out any mention or symbol of religion or faith in all public places does not constitute religious freedom. This could be construed as religious censorship for some. Surely, the ACLU opposes censorship.

The Ten Commandments plaque was presented to the Montgomery officials by the Church Women of Montgomery County in 1940. Before the Judicial Center was built in 1981, the plaque hung outside Courtroom One in the District Court.

No doubt this plaque is like the hundreds of statues and monuments you walk by, drive by or stand by each day and never notice. Rather than take the Ten Commandments down, other religious and secular groups should be encouraged to place other placards that espouse their affirmations and thinking.

I fundamentally agree with the ACLU's position opposing adult-led prayer in public schools. It's too difficult to administer without offending someone.

But I firmly believe all students should learn about various world religions as part of their basic education. Just as they study history, geography and languages, people ought to know the difference between Hindus and Muslims, Christians and Jews, atheists and agnostics. Such information breeds religious tolerance. Lack of knowledge—like removing the Ten Commandments as though they don't exist—is what leads to more problems.

So why is Mr. Spitzer picking on the Ten Commandments?

Only three of the 10 tenets speak directly to God or religious practices. The rest speak to what should be appropriate behavior and interpersonal skills. And God knows we can't be reminded enough about common courtesy and human decency.

The Commandments were engraved on stone tablets and given to Moses by God at Mount Sinai. They are the foundation of divine law in the Old Testament. They are also paramount, individually or collectively, in the ethical systems of Judaism, Christianity and Islam.

And just in case your memory needs to be refreshed or you never learned the Commandments, let me give you the hit parade:

1. I am the Lord thy God. Thou shalt have no other gods before Me.
2. Thou shalt not take the name of the Lord thy God in vain.
3. Remember the Sabbath day, to keep it holy.
4. Honor thy father and thy mother.
5. Thou shalt not kill.
6. Thou shalt not commit adultery.
7. Thou shalt not steal.
8. Thou shalt not bear false witness against thy neighbor.
9. Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's house.
10. Thou shalt not covet thy neighbor's wife, nor his manservant, nor his maidservant, nor his ox, nor his ass, nor anything that is thy neighbor's.

This is the fundamental moral code on which this country was founded, and to which the framers of the Constitution subscribed. I really don't think they thought the day would come that something as harmless as the Ten Commandments would be viewed as inappropriate to be seen in public building, especially a courthouse.

Montgomery County Attorney Joyce R. Stern unfortunately agrees with the ACLU's stance that the plaque, as presently displayed, does violate the Constitution. She ruled the plaque must be made part of a larger "historical display" to remain in the courthouse.

> The Ten Commandments plaque is a necessary reminder, something we can learn from, if not aspire to. It should stay right where it is as just one expression, one example, of what a whole lot of people believe it takes to truly live free in today's topsy-turvy world.

RESTORATION OF THE COEUR D'ALENE BASIN

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Ms. BROWN of Florida). Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Idaho [Mr. LAROCCO] is recognized for 5 minutes.

Mr. LAROCCO. Madam Speaker, I rise today to address an issue of vital importance to me, to Idaho, and the State of Washington, the restoration of the Coeur d'Alene Basin.

The Coeur d'Alene Basin covers approximately 3,700 square miles in north Idaho, including Lake Coeur d'Alene, the Coeur d'Alene River, the St. Joe River, St. Maries River, the Spokane River, and various tributaries. The basin forms the foundation of the region's economy, drinking water supply, and natural habitat.

The Coeur d'Alene Basin attracts an estimated 800,000 visitors annually. It provides 30 percent of the water to the region's sole-source aquifer, which serves over 400,000 residents in north Idaho and eastern Washington. The basin provides habitat for migratory bird populations—including tundra swan and wood ducks—as well as endangered, threatened or candidate species, such as bald eagle and the bull trout.

In the 1800's silver was discovered on the south fork of the Coeur d'Alene River Valley which was the beginning of the Coeur d'Alene mining district known as the "Silver Valley." In 1886, the first mill was put into operation at the Bunker Hill mining complex. By 1891 mining was flourishing.

Over a period of 100 years the mines of the Silver Valley produced nearly 45 percent of the Nation's silver, 11 percent of its lead, and 9 percent of its zinc. However, they also produced a tremendous quantity of heavy metal-contaminated wastes—an estimated 72 million tons of tailings were discharged into the Coeur d'Alene River.

I view restoration of the basin as one of the highest priorities for the future of north Idaho. I have been working in cooperation with the State of Idaho, the Coeur d'Alene Tribe, the mining industry and local citizens to devise a comprehensive plan for restoring the basin.

With the help of the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, U.S. Geological Survey, and the Bureau of Land Management, I have drafted a Coeur d'Alene Basin restoration bill as an amendment to the Clean Water Act. The State and the tribe have also drafted a legislative proposal.

Today I will be introducing both restoration bills.

At the request of the tribe and the State, I am introducing The Coeur d'Alene Basin and Spokane River Restoration Act of 1994, a bill that would establish a nonprofit corporation, the Coeur d'Alene Basin Restoration Corp., to provide for the conservation, remediation, and restoration of the Coeur d'Alene Basin and Spokane River watersheds. The corporation would serve to streamline restoration efforts, assure local control and public input, and reduce administrative costs.

I am also introducing The Coeur d'Alene Basin Restoration Act of 1994. Written as an amendment to the Clean Water Act, this bill would convene a Coeur d'Alene Basin Management Conference to develop a comprehensive pollution prevention, control, and restoration plan for the Coeur d'Alene Basin. In addition, the bill includes measures to assure that efforts by Federal agencies, including the U.S. Fish and Wildlife Service, U.S. Geological Survey, and the Bureau of Land Management, are coordinated as part of a comprehensive restoration plan.

The introduction of these bills signifies a new cooperative effort to restore the Coeur d'Alene Basin. The Environmental Protection Agency has pledged its full support for a cooperative restoration effort, and it has moved a full-time EPA staff person to Coeur d'Alene. The State of Idaho, the Coeur d'Alene Tribe, mining company officials, and community leaders have begun earnest discussions on a comprehensive restoration effort.

I want to stress that both bills have been drafted from the ground up and public involvement will remain a focal point as they move through the legislative process.

Madam Speaker, Idahoans elected me to lead and to solve problems. I have pledged to be a strong voice in Congress and will continue to work collectively with the tribe, the mining industry, the State of Idaho and local citizens to solve this difficult problem.

I want to add in closing, Madam Speaker, that Speaker FOLEY joins me in trying to resolve the issues of the Coeur d'Alene Basin and I welcome his support in these endeavors.

REVOLVING DOOR JUSTICE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Georgia [Mr. COLLINS] is recognized for 60 minutes.

Mr. COLLINS of Georgia. Madam Speaker, I want to begin my remarks today and refer back to a 1-minute speech that I gave on this floor March 4, 1993. Leading into this 1-minute speech was the 2 previous days. On each of the 2 previous days to this March 4 date, I came to the well of this House to deliver a 1-minute speech each of those days. The first day I referred my remarks not only to the Speaker but also to the President, and the Speaker challenged me and told me that I must refer all remarks to him. So I was out of order that day with those remarks as a freshman and unknowing to all of the rules.

The second day that I came to the well to give a 1-minute speech, I thought I was in order by reading excerpts from a letter from a constituent from Peachtree City, GA. In reading that letter and excerpts from that letter, the Speaker again hit the gavel and called my words out of order.

So the third day, not to be outdone, I came back to this well of the House for a 1-minute speech, and that 1-minute speech went something like this, Madam Speaker:

> Mr. Speaker, during this time on each of the past 2 days I have stood in this well and referred to letters and phone calls that I have received from people throughout the Third District of Georgia. I expressed their concerns, their fears, and their definition of the character of those of us who are involved in their Government.
>
> On each of those 2 days the Chair questioned my remarks and referred them to the Parliamentarian.
>
> Mr. Speaker, I differed with that questioning.
>
> Mr. Speaker, I will be out of order the day that I do not express the views of those who have sent me here to represent them.
>
> Mr. Speaker, I will be out of order the day I fail to carry through with the promises that I made when I asked those same people to send me here to represent them.
> Mr. Speaker, I will be out of order when I listen to the bureaucrats inside this Beltway instead of the people of the Third District of Georgia."

Madam Speaker, I wanted to refer to that out-of-order speech prior to speaking a little bit about the crime bill and the vote on the rule pertaining to the crime bill that took place here in this House yesterday, because the vote that I cast was a reflection of that out-of-order speech. It was a reflection of promises I had made when I was seeking this office. It was a reflection of the phone calls, the letters, the personal contact and the correspondence that I have received from the people of the Third District of Georgia.

Madam Speaker, when I received those correspondence or those contacts I did not ask those people questions other than listening to their requests, their comments. I only answered questions. I did not ask them what religion they were, I did not ask them what party they belonged to, I never ask them what race they are. I just listened to their comments, and that is the vote that I cast yesterday on the rule pertaining to the crime bill.

But, Madam Speaker, we can pass a crime bill in this House, and truthfully we should pass a crime bill. But we need to pass a good crime bill. We need to pass a crime bill that will actually address the problem, and that is the problems of the criminal. Get criminals off the streets. We need to address it in an area and in a way that imposes punishment, a deterrent. Many may think or may even be used as scapegoats, but if they do wrong, they deserve punishment, no matter what their personal thoughts.

But in order to address crime and crime prevention, I think we need to focus in, too, on some of the cases of crime and where a crime resolves, what it is resolved around. Often times that is in the area of poverty. Financial conditions of a person or a family would lead someone or entice someone to do wrong. Poverty areas are areas where crime is rampant, such as detected by the fact that if you follow welfare spending you also follow spending on crime, and often these areas of poverty are also areas of welfare. Those people, a lot of those people who live there are impoverished, they have no hope. They see no hope, they see no promise. They see a community of people that just like them live with no hope. They see other neighborhoods on the TV and hear about it on the radio and read about it in the media that also have no hope.

Why do they have no hope? Again it is financial. Again it is an area we need to address. I think we need to address, it with jobs, job opportunities, something that gives them hope, something that gives independence.

We can do that. But we do not need to do it with government, government jobs. Government jobs are taxpayer payroll jobs. There is no hope in a government job as such, because government jobs are temporary jobs, and that is the reason, because it is temporary, there is no permanence to it. We need to turn to the private sector, and we need to encourage the private sector to go into these communities, these urban areas, and not only urban areas but rural areas and establish manufacturing, establish businesses that will create jobs and provide jobs and provide hope for those in those impoverished areas. And we can do that. That is not only the job of this House, but it is something that this House should and must do.

There are a couple of areas of the crime bill that I want to refer to other than just that area that was referred to yesterday quite often as social spending. One is the area of the provision that provides for 100,000 additional cops on the streets. That is a provision that sounds good. It is a provision that is supported by many people. Why is it supported by so many? Because when they see a cop on the beat, whether he is walking, or whether he is in his patrol car or on his motorcycle, it gives them a sense of security, because there is someone in the area that is one of the good guys, the police.

But I question whether or not those 100,000 policemen are really again just a dead-end effort, because the funding for those policemen will fall far short, because there again it is temporary funding. The additional or continued policing by those cops who this encourages the hiring of will have to be picked up by those local entities. I know first hand and have had experience in that area. As a country commissioner in Butts County, GA, some 15 years or 16 years ago, there was a program, encouraged by the Federal Government, to hire deputy sheriffs, additional police, and for a small county and a small budget we took advantage of it, advantage of what we thought was a good thing. The only thing was it was good for only awhile, because the funds ran out. Then we as county commissioners and the governing body of that county had to fund those additional officers out of the treasury of that county.

So I think even though it sounds good, and it is good, it is good to have those people on the street, it is a little bit of false advertising from this House to say that we are furnishing the money, all of the money for those 100,000 policemen.

Another area that I want to address in the crime bill that was very controversial was that of the gun control provisions and what makes it so hard to swallow for many people across this country, and a lot of those in the Third District of Georgia. It is not the fact that we were eliminating through that procedure some guns. The real problem is that provision only pertained to a legal transfer of weapons, a legal transfer. It would stop the manufacture and prohibit the transfer of certain weapons. But it did not pertain and will not pertain and cannot pertain, and you will not pass any legislation in this House or in the other body that will pertain to the black market. And there are millions of weapons in that black market. They are passed, they are sold, they are given daily, and no legislation that we adopt will pertain to that weapon.

True, we can pass legislation that pertains to that person who is usually and normally a criminal that passes that weapon.

Back several months ago when we had the Brady bill on this floor, unlike this time with the crime bill, and I did not receive any phone calls from any of the people from the White House or the Cabinet, but when the Brady bill was on the floor, I received a call from Ms. Reno, and I was very pleased that she took the time to call me. I was impressed that she would call me, and she called to ask me to support the Brady bill and to oppose all amendments to it.

I told Ms. Reno I really appreciated her call, but I could not do that, because the people in the Third District of Georgia had asked me to oppose the Brady bill and support all amendments to it. It was not, as I informed her, the 3-day, 5-day, 7-day, 15-day, whatever the delay might be, that was not the emphasis; the problem and the concern of the people of the Third District of Georgia was this in the first step, the first step toward prohibition of weapons altogether.

Madam Speaker, you know, those people of the Third District of Georgia were right. Because immediately following the Brady bill came the ban on the assault weapons, the ban on the legal transfer of weapons, again, no ban on the black market and the transfer in that area. We need to rethink that and stop punishing and trying to deter or prevent law-abiding, legal purchases by people who are not of the criminal element.

Madam Speaker, again, I go back to the fact that we can, and we should, pass a crime bill. We should pass one that had the provision in it that I really liked in this one that the dealing with the fact that we were going to assist States with the construction of prisons, and they do need help. Many States are short of funds for the purpose of prison construction.

Fortunately, Georgia has built several prisons in recent years. My first year in the Georgia State senate, the first budget that came to the floor of the senate, there were no prisons included, but after several members of that senate body approached the appropriations committees, we were fortunate enough to include, before the finalization of that budget, some five prisons. All five have been built and opened, and along with three additional, along with additional boot camps, boot camps again, part of this crime bill that we are looking at that is in conference.

A Judge Kenneth Kilpatrick from Clayton County, GA, a State superior court judge there, sent information to Gov. Zell Miller pertaining to criminals, voicing the concern of many superior court judges in Georgia about the fact that criminals were being released from prison far before their sentences were completed or even long before even half of their sentences were completed. I have the package that Judge Kilpatrick sent to the Governor, Governor Zell Miller, and I want to read just two or three quotes from this package words and comments of Judge Kilpatrick.

First of all, and to quote him, he says, "Do not get hung up on the words 'violence' and 'one-third.' Violent offenders ought to be put away, but so should burglars, auto thieves, forgers, drug dealers, habitual offenders, and other criminals who are not normally called violent." And, again, he says, "Why should anyone sent to a penitentiary get out after serving only 33 percent of their sentence?" That was the one-third he referred to. "One-third has become a buzzword that lacks common sense. Make three-fourths the law, build the prisons, and watch the fear leave our streets." he went on to tell the Governor, "Until we face the fact that there are several thousand predators and punks walking the streets who must be incarcerated, neither we nor our property will be safe."

And, finally, he referred to Cool Hand Luke in the movie, and to quote Cool Hand Luke, "What we have here is a failure to communicate." The judge says to the governor, "Well, what we have here is a failure to rehabilitate. Goodness knows they have had their chances. We need to incarcerate."

I want to read just about, well, four particular cases out of a number of cases that the judge cited, and what had upset him about the early release of prisoners. A John Michael Conn, convicted of vehicular homicide in the first degree on July 25, 1991. He was drunk, 0.16 percent alcohol blood content, when he hit and killed a 13-year-old boy riding on a bicycle. He received a split sentence, 15 years, split to serve 8, 7 on probation. Mr. Conn was paroled December 9, 1993, serving less than 18 months of his sentence, 13 percent of the sentence rendered.

Another one was John Frederic Freeman, convicted of possession with intent to distribute cocaine in September 1992. The pardons and parole board said Mr. Freeman will be released in March 1994, serving 18 months of a 10-year sentence.

Shane Dolan Knight, convicted of at least 18 counts of burglary and forgery in the first degree, given a sentence of 10 years, released after 22 months, serving 18 percent of his 10-year sentence, and last, Karlston R. Blackstock, convicted of three counts of burglary sentenced to 15 years, released in 48 months, serving 27 percent of his sentence.

No wonder we cannot get control over crime.

Madam Speaker, I want to refer to an article that was in the National Review of June 13, 1994, written by Wesley Smith as he talks about in other areas how the Federal courts and the Federal Government have intervened with States in the operation of prisons, which has led to an enormous amount of lawsuits filed in Federal courts by inmates.

In 1966 there were 218 such lawsuits; in 1993 there were 53,000 such lawsuits. I think that is an area we need to address also, Madam Speaker.

I am placing that in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

Madam Speaker, I say we need to assist States, but we also need to assure that there will be severe and swift punishment.

We had an opportunity during the debate and the amendments offered here on this floor to change the habeas corpus laws, limit the number of habeas corpus appeals at the Federal level. We chose not to do so. We only chose to increase the number of instances where the death penalty can be applied at the Federal level.

But, Madam Speaker, we do not apply the death penalty at the Federal level. We very seldom apply it at the State level due to the fact of the endless appeals that are allowed.

Madam Speaker, I do not know about other Members of this House, but I have witnessed two executions in Georgia in the last 3 years, execution of one person who had cold-bloodedly shot and killed with a shotgun a police officer. Madam Speaker, it took 17 years of appeal after appeal to finally carry out the will of the people and the law of Georgia.

The second execution that I witnessed was just this spring. A person who had attacked two women and beat their heads off with a club.

Again, it took 15 years to bring that person to justice. Madam Speaker, that is too long. The people are tired of those types of appeals, and it does not help the system when we carry the appeals process for that length of time. We must address the death penalty, the imposition of it, and change the laws so that we can do it in a swifter pattern.

Madam Speaker, if we are going to address crime and we are going to address welfare reform in this Nation, we have to do them together or we will not get very good results either way.

I think they ought to parallel each other, we must have tax reform, tax reform that will encourage people to take a risk and invest, invest in communities, go back to those communities to which I referred that we impoverished, locate businesses in those areas so that we can create jobs in those areas because many of those people have no way to commute to another area for another job.

Madam Speaker, there are a number of things that we can do, a number of things that we can do jointly in this body, and it must be and it should be a bipartisan effort. I say it should be, it does not have to be a bipartisan effort; there are enough members of one party in this House to do any or all of these things. But if we take the time and we put our heads together and communicate with each other in this House, as Cool Hand Luke said, "I think we are failing to communicate"—but we need to communicate with each other.

Madam Speaker, when I got to the office this morning, and usually I am there around 7, I penned out a quick letter to the President, took it out to the fax machine myself and faxed it over to the White House, knowing I probably will never hear from it. I have sent a number of letters. Once in a while I will get a response, but it is not from President Bill Clinton, our President; it is from some staffer.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, DC, August 12, 1994.

MR. PRESIDENT: I voted against the Rule for the Crime Bill not as an anti-vote toward anyone but as a representative vote for the people I represent. I am sure this is true of most of us who voted No.

Mr. President, you are faced with several options. I will refer to two. First, push forward and oppose the public, creating additional problems for Members of Congress or; second, listen to those of us who are voicing the concerns of constituents. To do so we must have the opportunity to discuss such concerns.

I have asked several times for such an audience but to no avail.

We, Congress, can pass a crime bill. A crime bill which will address crime problems. However, it will be difficult or the results will not be as positive as they should be if name calling and finger-pointing continues.

I know it is wishful thinking but I do wish I could have a few minutes of your time.

Best Regards,

MAC COLLINS.

Mr. COLLINS of Georgia. Madam Speaker, I want to wish you best regards. I know that just as soon as I hush, you are headed toward Florida, and I hope you have an enjoyable weekend because I am headed to Georgia.

JAILHOUSE BLUES

TRUTH IN SENTENCING

FEDERAL JUDGES SEEM INFINITELY SOLICITOUS OF THE INMATES OF STATE PRISONS, AND NEARLY INDIFFERENT TO THEIR VICTIMS, PAST AND FUTURE. HOW CAN LAW-ABIDING CITIZENS BEGIN TO REDRESS THE BALANCE?

(By Wesley Smith)

(Mr. Smith is deputy director of the Governors' Forum at the Heritage Foundation and a member of the advisory board of the Safe Streets Alliance)

In 1989 Kenny Parker filed suit against Nevada state officials for "cruel and unusual punishment." His complaint? They had given him a jar of creamy peanut butter, whereas he had explicitly ordered chunky. One of Parker's jailmates—convicted first-degree murderer David Bean—is suing the state because the jeans he was given were too tight, "causing rashes and epileptic seizures." Another Nevada inmate, convicted child molester Chris Chapman, is suing for copies of the North American Man-Boy Love Association newsletter, as a matter of First Amendment rights. Iowa prisoner Art Hartsock, wanting to "see what I'm missing while I'm in here," has demanded greater access to pornography.

These "rights" violations seem less constitutional than comical, but they are taken seriously by the federal judiciary. In 1993, the nation's prisoners filed over 53,000 lawsuits in federal court, generally against state governments. While most cases are dismissed as frivolous, the litigation explosion has cost the states hundreds of millions of dollars in legal fees and in the costs of complying with the courts' orders. In 1993 Nevada alone spent about $700,000 in direct legal costs defending against suits like Parker's.

These legal costs, however, are dwarfed by the indirect costs on society as a whole. Most governors, state attorneys, and other criminal-justice officials say the prisoners'-rights movement is making state prisons ungovernable. And federally imposed prison population caps and other decrees aimed at alleviating "overcrowding" have forced the early release of tens of thousands of violent criminals.

JUDICIAL TSUNAMI

In 1966 prisoners filed 218 suits in federal court to remedy arguably inhumane treatment in federal, state, and county prisons. Then the federal judiciary opened the floodgates. By 1980 prisoner suits had increased twentyfold. In 1993 prisoners filed 53,713 lawsuits in federal courts—7,615 more suits than the Federal Government filed against criminals.

By 1993, four-fifths of all state prison systems and roughly one-third of the five hundred largest local jails were under federal-court supervision. And the courts are mostly not content to set broad guidelines for the states to interpret. In Arizona, for example, federal judges tell state prison officials the types of publications and typewriters they must buy for prisoners and the number of law clerks they must hire for the state's prison law libraries. (Delaware Attorney General Charles Oberly II says such rulings mean state prisoners have better access to law materials than he does.)

In South Carolina, Federal Judge James McMillan has given the state orders to purchase specific recreational equipment for prisoners, including three sets of horseshoe equipment, three guitars, five frisbees, fifty decks of playing cards, and a piano. In Alabama a federal judge orders the state to provide inmates air conditioning and televisions. In other states federal judges are seeing state-sponsored "cruel and unusual punishment" in prisons lacking basketball courts, weight rooms, televisions, workshops, or single-occupancy cells.

Under the guise of constitutional jurisprudence, the federal judiciary has aggressively replaced the criminal-justice policies of the fifty states with its own. Groups like the ACLU's National Prison Project argue that states must treat prisoners much as they do citizens at large. Federal judges have agreed; and in their pursuit to elevate the legal status of prisoners to that of law-abiding people, they have removed the concept of prison as punishment, and with it much of the deterrent effect of imprisonment.

Of course, prisoners have been quick to adopt this distorted view of their moral and legal status. An Illinois inmate demanded the right to use his cell as his place of residence for conducting drug-related activities. A Nevada inmate sued for the right to cross-dress, and 14 death-row inmates in California sued for the right to procreate through artificial insemination. Florida's Robert Procup sued when he got just one bread roll on his dinner plate, and sued again when prison officials failed to provide him a salad at lunch. When told by ABC's John Stossel that he was, after all, being punished, Procup replied, "Nobody sentenced me to punishment. They sentenced me to be separated from society"—a recurring theme of the prisoner's-rights movement. Procup was convicted of murder for cementing his business partner into a storage shed.

While federal judges see much decisions as principled constitutionalism, most prisoners see them as a weakness that demands to be exploited. Art Hartsock, the prisoner who won for himself and other inmates at Anamosa State Prison the right to view pornographic magazines, is now preparing for another suit. His reasoning: "Every dollar they spend fighting a lawsuit is a dollar they can't spend building a place to lock me up."

At age 15 Willie Bosket killed two New York subway riders "for the experience." He has also tried to kill two prison guards, which is why prison officials chain him to his cell door for five minutes each day before moving him. Of the chaining Bosket says, "I feel several things. I feel humiliated. I feel an affront to my dignity. I feel vulnerable." A federal court afforded him a jury trial to decide whether he would continue to be chained. At his trial Bosket told jurors his only regret was that he had not killed the guard. He vowed to kill again.

Most criminals show a psychology of denial for their criminal actions. Nevada Deputy Attorney General Anne Cathcart says criminals "come into prison denying any wrongdoing, and they are constantly presented with further reasons to blame others. Unlimited access to federal courts gives them an added tool to vent their anger and rebel against the system."

This undermines rehabilitation efforts generally, as prisoners quickly learn that contempt for the system is rewarded. But the federal bench has even prohibited specific state rehabilitation plans as violative of prisoners' rights. After Governor Gerald Baliles discovered in 1986 that 85 percent of Virginia inmates were illiterate, he started a program that linked reading proficiency to early parole. The ACLU threatened suit, saying prisoners had a right to parole without literacy tests, so Baliles made the program voluntary and consequently much less successful. Governor Fife Symington thought pornography might not be healthy for Arizona inmates, many of whom are sex offenders, so he decided last January to prohibit all pornographic materials in the state's prisons. That sounded reasonable to Arizona citizens, but Federal Judge Muecke didn't agree; he has begun contempt hearings against the state.

EACH TO HIS OWN RELIGION

Federal encroachment took a dramatic leap forward last November when Congress passed the Religious Freedom Restoration Act. RFRA severely limits the power of government to restrict a prisoner's religious activities.

Before RFRA, a state could restrict certain practices in prison to maintain order. For instance, Illinois forbade inmates belonging to Aryan Nation's religious arm, the Church of Jesus Christ Christian, to distribute literature calling for the extermination of Jews and blacks. In 1992 they sued the state for the right to do so. Shortly after RFRA became law, they amended their complaint with new-founded RFRA rights. Under this new standard Illinois will almost certainly lose. Susan O'Leary, deputy chief legal counsel for the state, predicts that this will incite riots in Illinois prisons, which have a 66 percent black population.

In 1987, the followers of Yahweh Ben Yahweh and his "Temple of Love" demanded the right to distribute hate literature among inmates and lost in court. They are now suing again under RFRA and have already won at the district court level. The Temple of Love, like Aryan Nation, is seeking attorney fees and monetary damages for religious rights denied them before RFRA even became law. These remedies do not take into account the costs to the states of hiring additional guards or building new cells to separate these inmates from others for their protection.

Even before RFRA, some federal courts were reluctant to define what constitutes a genuine religion. A federal court in 1974 declared The Church of the New Song a religion; this church requires Harvey's Bristol Cream, filet mignon, and marijuana for its religious ceremonies. In Indiana inmates calling themselves the Black Gangster Disciples are claiming a "new Muslim" status, even though prison officials believe their aim is to infiltrate their gang into the older Muslim group. In Colorado, inmate Robert Howard, a practicing Satanist, is suing for the right to religious materials including the Satanic Bible, passages of which command the sacrificing of a "preferably Christian" female virgin and the using of candles made from the fat of unbaptized babies. With RFRA, States will have little discretion in restricting so-called religious activities such as these in order to maintain security.

Religion-based demands for special diets are particularly costly to the States. Nevada Attorney General Frankie Sue del Papa says providing a special religious diet winds up adding 65 per cent to the total cost of imprisoning one inmate. California Attorney General Dan Lungren estimates that if only 2 per cent of the national inmate population demands special religious diets, it will cost the States at least $177 million annually.

Even if a state ultimately wins such a case, its taxpayers still lose. Since RFRA allows a state to restrict a religious practice only in a way that is least burdensome to the prisoner, few courts will be able to dismiss frivolous claims on summary judgment. Evidentiary hearings, expert witnesses, and transportation of prisoners, and state's witnesses to the hearings will be required to determine if the state is using a "least restrictive" penology. And since RFRA applies retroactively, cases already won by States will be relitigated.

According to a Senate staffer who worked to modify RFRA, "Congress imagined Baptist preachers holding Bible studies in prison. Who could be against that? They failed to realize it would be Satanists, white supremacists, and those wanting better lunches that would really take advantage of RFRA protections." Of course, the more reasonable inmate requests that RFRA was aimed at protecting, like Bible classes, were rarely denied. And now, since all "religions" will be entitled to equal treatment, States will be forced to eliminate legitimate religious programs in order to avoid suits by other "religious" groups demanding equal funding.

THE IGNORED RIGHT

As the definition of prisoners' rights has mushroomed, basic constitutional rights like personal safety have actually diminished. Prisons have become more violent than ever before, and America's streets have become more dangerous, as federal judges force the early release of violent criminals to reduce "cruel and unusual" overcrowding.

Although the Supreme Court in Rhodes V. Chapman declared double bunking was not, per se, cruel and unusual, it reaffirmed the right of the federal judiciary to decide the constitutionality of state prison conditions by looking at the "totality of the circumstances." By the early 1980's the lower federal courts had begun to set prison population limits that forced the release of prisoners by the tens of thousands in the following years.

After a court in 1981 imposed a population cap in Texas prisons, the state parole board increased early releases by over 400 per cent with inmates serving an average of 2 months for every year sentenced. This was followed by a 29 per cent surge of crime in Texas during the next decade, at a time when crime decreased nationally. The courts also mandated population reductions in county jails in Texas and across the country, forcing them to increase pre-trial releases. In Cook County, Illinois, almost 30,000 accused criminals are released before trial each year for this reason. Of that group, 67 percent are re-arrested on felony charges before their cases come to trial, over 25 percent of them for violent crimes.

The personal tragedies this federal policy has created are reported with numbing frequency in the nation's newspapers. Last June, Loran Cole, like other "nonviolent" criminals, was released early from a Florida prison to alleviate overcrowding; he had served only 18 months of a 66-month sentence for grand theft. Eight months later Cole was charged with the murder of John Edwards, an 18-year-old student at Florida State, and the kidnaping and rape of Edwards's sister. In Texas, Michael Blair served 18 months of a 10-year sentence for burglary and indecency with an 11-year-old girl (his actual crime, sexual assault, had been plea-bargained down). While still on parole in 1993, he raped and murdered 7-year-old Ashely Nicole Estell after kidnaping her from a park in an upscale Dallas community. Had he served even half his time, Blair would have been in prison on the day Ashley and her family went to the park. Kenneth McDuff was convicted and sentenced to death in 1968 for first-degree murder, for killing three teenagers execution style. McDuff's death sentence was commuted to life imprisonment when the Supreme Court outlawed capital punishment in 1972. This made him eligible for parole, which he got in 1989. Since then, he has been linked to the rape and murder of four women.

Just the threat of court-ordered releases has been enough to push state parole boards to release prisoners early. Between 1983 and 1993 the Georgia parole board released 36,006 violent and sex offenders—including 2,772 multiple sex offenders—after they had served an average of 36 percent of their sentences. In 1989, Governor Joe Frank Harris released 13,000 "nonviolent" prisoners under an emergency program to reduce prison populations when inmates threatened federal lawsuits. Since then the Georgia parole board has accelerated thousands of paroles. Although the parole board insists the released prisoners were "nonviolent," Clayton County Superior Court Judge Kenneth Kilpatrick says the early release of even nonviolent felons increases both nonviolent and violent crime, because short imprisonment suggests to criminals that any crime brings light punishment.

According to Department of Justice statistics, three-fourths of all violent criminals convicted in 1989 were back on the streets by December of 1993. Safe Streets Alliance President James Wootton [see sidebar, page 41] points out that 3.2 million criminals are out on parole or probation. Even modest early releases have been devastating. A study in Illinois in the early 1980s found that 21,000 prisoners released just 3 months early committed 23 homicides, 32 rapes, 262 arsons, 681 robberies, 2,472 burglaries, and 2,572 assaults during the 3-month period. Nationally, almost one-third of all violent crimes are committed by criminals on parole or pre-trial release. The federal courts have no apparent concern for the victims, however, but focus exclusively on the injustices they perceive as being committed against prisoners.

??? reform, it should dramatically limit federal-court jurisdiction over state prison administration. Article III of the Constitution gives Congress this power. If senators and congressmen refuse to use it, they should be held accountable by the voters for the foolish decisions of the federal judiciary in releasing criminals to rape and murder a second, third, and fourth time.

But there is no indication that Congress is willing to do so; therefore the States themselves will need to take matters into their own hands. They may be forced to confront Washington, as Governor Symington is doing in defying the federal court order that allows pornography in Arizona's prisons.

Governors like Symington, Mike Leavitt of Utah, and George Allen of Virginia, and hundreds of other state and local law-enforcement officials, see the current fight over control of state prisons as a small part of a larger problem. The federal judiciary's activism stems from an abstract theory of individual rights that disregards the rights of the community. Deliberately detached from the effects of their decisions on society, federal judges have acted as if they intended to strip communities of any power to defend themselves.

As recently elected Virginia Attorney General James Gilmore has said, it is the state's responsibility to make streets "as safe for our children as it was for us when we were growing up." The success of that agenda will be determined in large measure by the power of the States to free themselves from Washington's control.

(c) LHD-7 CONTRACT OPTION EXTENSION.—(1) The Secretary of the Navy is authorized to extend the existing contract option for the LHD-7 Amphibious Assault ship if the Secretary determines that the extension would be in the best interest of the United States.

(2) The Secretary of the Navy shall immediately begin negotiations to extend the existing contract option for the LHD–7 Amphibious Assault Ship Program.

(3) On and after the date that is 30 days after the date on which the Secretary notifies Congress of an intention to do so, the Secretary may use for such contract option extension funds that are authorized to be appropriated for other Navy programs. The notification shall include a description of the intended use of the funds.

(d) REPORT REQUIREMENT.—The Secretary of the Navy shall submit to Congress, after December 31, 1994, but before March 31, 1995, a report stating the Secretary's intentions regarding exercise of the existing contract option for the LHD–7 Amphibious Assault Ship. (d) CONTRACT MODIFICATIONS REGARDING CONTRACTOR COMMITMENTS.—(1) The Secretary of the Air Force shall incorporate into each appropriate C–17 contract the commitment of the prime contractor to make C–17 program changes as described in paragraph (2) on a nonreimbursable or cost-share basis.

(2) Paragraph (1) applies to the commitment of the prime contractor provided in the C–17 settlement agreement to make the following C–17 program changes:

(4) That during fiscal year 1995 no funds available to the Department of Defense will be used to relax performance requirements specified in the acquisition program baseline beyond the extent provided for in the C–17 settlement agreement.

(5) That the Secretary will transmit to Congress milestones and exit criteria for the C–17 not later than March 1, 1995.

(6) That nothing in the C–17 settlement agreement releases the contractor from any potential liability for fraud or criminal violations.

(f) RESTRICTION ON USE OF DOD FUNDS FOR DEVELOPMENT OF ALTERNATIVE AIRCRAFT.—No funds appropriated to the Department of Defense for fiscal year 1995 may be used to design, develop, or produce a modified version of the C–17 aircraft that could be considered to be a nondevelopmental alternative aircraft for purposes of future Department of the Air Force competitions for intertheater airlift requirements.

(g) OTHER CONTRACTOR OBLIGATIONS.—Nothing in this section shall be construed as relieving the prime contractor for the C–17 aircraft from any obligation provided for in the C–17 settlement agreement.

(h) C–17 SETTLEMENT AGREEMENT DEFINED.—For purposes of this section, the term "C–17 settlement agreement" means the settlement agreement that was proposed to the prime contractor for the C–17 aircraft program by the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition and Technology by letter dated January 3, 1994, and that was accepted by that prime contractor on January 6, 1994.

As part of such examination, the Secretary shall do the following:

(1) Determine those core bomber industrial capabilities that are needed to maintain the ability to design, develop, and produce bomber aircraft in the near-term and in the long-term and that—

(A) would take extended periods of time or substantial expense to regenerate; and

(B) are in imminent danger of being lost.

(2) For each strategy examined—

(A) estimate the cost of implementing the strategy;

(B) make a judgment about the affordability of the strategy; and

(C) assess the time required to implement the strategy.

SEC. 211. SPACE LAUNCH MODERNIZATION.

(a) POLICY.—(1) It is in the Nation's long-term national security and economic interests to regain preeminence in the area of space launch technology and operations.

(2) Access to space at affordable costs is fundamental to maintaining required command, control, communications, intelligence, navigation, weather, and early warning support to United States and coalition forces.

(3) Encouragement of privately financed, cost effective expendable and reusable launch vehicles is in the economic interest of the Department of Defense and the United States Government.

(b) FINDING.—Congress finds that the current Department of Defense space launch infrastructure has several deficiencies, including high cost, excessive management overhead, inadequate operability and responsiveness to satellite launch requirements, lack of standardization, very large launch personnel requirements to support launch operations, over capacity, and technology obsolescence.

(c) REQUIRED ACTIONS.—The Secretary of Defense shall take the following actions in pursuance of the space launch modernization policy set forth in subsection (a) and to correct the deficiencies described in subsection (b):

(1) Develop an integrated space launch vehicle strategy that, if implemented, would replace or consolidate the current fleet of medium and heavy launch vehicles. Where prudent and cost effective, the strategy should include a plan for the development of new or upgraded expendable launch vehicles.

(2) Implement improved management practices including streamlined acquisition approaches, small government program staff, and minimal program overhead.

(3) Encourage and evaluate innovative acquisition, technical, and financing (including best commercial practices) solutions for providing affordable, operable, reliable, and responsive access to space.

(4) Centralize oversight of launch requirements to ensure integrated evaluation of satellite requirements and launch capabilities.

Such kits should be able to be integrated into aircraft at minimal or no cost.

(2) Paragraph (1) applies to guided and unguided in-inventory munitions of the class of 1,000 pounds and below.

(b) REPORT.—The Secretary of the Air Force shall submit to Congress a report setting forth in detail the results and costs of the demonstration under subsection (a) and the applicability of the technology demonstrated in providing the Armed Forces with an inexpensive near-term solution to providing both range extension and accurate guided capability to in-inventory munitions.

(c) CONTENT OF REPORT.—The report required by subsection (b) shall contain the following:

(1) The number of positions identified by the Secretary, including the positions in which employees of the Department of Defense have replaced military personnel and the positions to which employees of the Department of Defense are planned to be assigned to replace military personnel.

(2) The cost of carrying out the planned changes in assignments.

(3) A discussion of the effects of such changes on workforce restructuring plans of the Department.

(4) A discussion of the efforts of the Secretary to encourage within the Department of Defense the assignment of employees of the Department to replace military personnel.

(5) An explanation of the justifications for maintaining variances in excess of 20 percent among the military departments in the percentage of support positions common to two or more military departments that are filled by employees of the Department of Defense rather than military personnel.

(B) to certify to the Secretary the cost incurred by the employer for any necessary training provided to such person in connection with the employment by that employer.

(2) The Secretary shall pay a retraining incentive to the non-Federal employer upon the employee's completion of 12 months of continuous employment by that employer. Subject to subsection (f), the Secretary shall prescribe the amount of the incentive.

(3) The Secretary shall pay a prorated amount of the full retraining incentive to the non-Federal employer for an employee who does not remain employed by the non-Federal employer for at least 12 months.

(4) In no event may the amount of the retraining incentive paid for the training of any one person under the pilot program exceed the amount certified for that person under paragraph (1).

(d) RELOCATION INCENTIVE.—The Secretary may pay a relocation incentive to an eligible employee if it is necessary for the employee to relocate in order to commence employment with a non-Federal employer under the pilot program. Subject to subsection (f), the amount of the incentive shall be equal to the total amount authorized to be paid for travel, transportation, and subsistence expenses under subchapter II of chapter 57 of title 5, United States Code, including the reimbursements authorized under section 5724b of such title, to a Federal employee being transferred between the same locations as the person paid the incentive.

The Secretary may, at the discretion of the Secretary, permit dependents of members of the armed forces and, to the extent provided in subsection (c), dependents of civilian employees of the Federal Government residing in a territory, commonwealth, or possession of the United States but not on a military installation, to enroll in an educational program provided by the Secretary pursuant to this subsection.

"(3) A dependent of a Federal employee may continue enrollment in a program under this subsection for the remainder of a school year notwithstanding a change during such school year in the status of the Federal employee that, except for this paragraph, would otherwise terminate the eligibility of the dependent to be enrolled in the program. The preceding sentence does not limit the authority of the Secretary to remove the dependent from enrollment in the program at any time for good cause determined by the Secretary.

"(d) SCHOOL BOARDS.—(1) The Secretary of Defense shall provide for the establishment of a school board for Department of Defense elementary and secondary schools established at each military installation under this section.

Subtitle D—Retired Pay and Survivor Benefits

SEC. 631. ELIMINATION OF DISPARITY BETWEEN EFFECTIVE DATES FOR MILITARY AND CIVILIAN RETIREE COST-OF-LIVING ADJUSTMENTS FOR FISCAL YEAR 1995.

(a) In General.—The fiscal year 1995 increase in military retired pay shall (notwithstanding subparagraph (B) of section 1401a(b)(2) of title 10, United States Code) first be payable as part of such retired pay for the month of March 1995.

(b) Definitions.—For the purposes of subsection (a):

(1) The term "fiscal year 1995 increase in military retired pay" means the increase in retired pay that, pursuant to paragraph (1) of section 1401a(b) of title 10, United States Code, becomes effective on December 1, 1994.

(2) The term "retired pay" includes retainer pay.

(c) Limitation.—Subsection (a) shall be effective only if there is appropriated to the Department of Defense Military Retirement Fund (in an Act making appropriations for the Department of Defense for fiscal year 1995 that is enacted before March 1, 1995) such amount as is necessary to offset increased outlays to be made from that fund during fiscal year 1995 by reason of the provisions of subsection (a).

(d) AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS.—There is authorized to be appropriated for fiscal year 1995 to the Department of Defense Military Retirement Fund the sum of $376,000,000 to offset increased outlays to be made from that fund during fiscal year 1995 by reason of the provisions of subsection (a).

SEC. 632. SENSE OF CONGRESS ON EQUAL TREATMENT OF EFFECTIVE DATES FOR FUTURE COST-OF-LIVING ADJUSTMENTS FOR MILITARY AND CIVILIAN RETIREES.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) Congress, in the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1993, changed the effective dates for future cost-of-living adjustments for military retired pay and for Federal civilian retirement annuities, which (before that Act) were provided by law to be made effective on December 1 each year.

(2) The timing, and the percentage of increase, of military and Federal civilian retirees' cost-of-living adjustments have been linked for decades.

(3) The effect of the enactment of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1993 was to abandon the longstanding congressional practice of treating military and Federal civilian retirees identically in matters related to cost-of-living adjustments.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—In light of the findings in subsection (a), it is the sense of Congress that—

(1) as a matter of simple equity and fairness, it is imperative that cost-of-living adjustments in retirement benefits for military and Federal civilian retirees be returned to an identical schedule as soon as possible, but not later than January 1, 1999;

(2) if after October 1, 1998, there is, by law, a difference between the date on which a cost-of-living adjustment for Federal civilian retirees takes effect and the date on which a cost-of-living adjustment for military retirees takes effect, then the difference in those effective dates should be eliminated by requiring that cost-of-living adjustments for both classes of retirees become effective on the earlier of the two dates; and

(3) if after October 1, 1998, there is, by law, a difference between the first month for which a cost-of-living adjustment for civilian retirees is payable and the first month for which a cost-of-living adjustment for military retirees is payable, then the difference in the months for which those adjustments are first payable should be eliminated by requiring that the cost-of-living adjustments for both classes of retirees first become payable for the earlier of the two months.

SEC. 633. CLARIFICATION OF CALCULATION OF RETIRED PAY FOR OFFICERS WHO RETIRE IN A GRADE LOWER THAN THE GRADE HELD AT RETIREMENT.

(a) PREVENTION OF RETIRED PAY BASED ON GRADE HIGHER THAN RETIRED GRADE.—Section 1401a(f) of title 10, United States Code, is amended—

(1) in the first sentence, by inserting "based on the grade in which the member is retired" after "at an earlier date";

(2) in the second sentence, by inserting ", except that such computation may not be based on a rate of basic pay for a grade higher than the grade in which the member is retired" before the period at the end; and

(3) by striking out the third sentence.

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by subsection (a) shall apply with respect to the computation of the retired pay of a member of the Armed Forces who retires on or after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 634. WAIVER OF ADMINISTRATIVE TIME-IN-GRADE REQUIREMENTS TO PREVENT PAY INVERSIONS IN RETIRED PAY OF CERTAIN MILITARY RETIREES.

(a) AUTHORITY.—The Secretary concerned may, for purposes of the computation under section 1401a(f) of title 10, United States Code, of the retired pay of military retirees described in subsection (b), waive any administrative time-in-grade regulation (as described in subsection (d)) that would otherwise apply to such computation. Any such waiver may be made retroactive, in the case of any such retiree, to the date on which that retiree initially became entitled to retired pay.

(b) COVERED RETIREES.—This section applies to any military retiree—

(1) who initially became entitled to retired pay on or after January 1, 1971, and before the date of the enactment of this Act;

(2) whose retired pay, by reason of the provisions of section 1401a(f) of title 10, United States Code (the so-called "Tower amendment"), was initially computed as an amount greater than would have been the case but for that section; and

(3) who, as of the earlier computation date applicable to that retiree—

(A) in the case of an individual retired in an enlisted grade, had served in the grade in which the retiree retired for a period that was less than the period prescribed by the applicable administrative time-in-grade requirement described in subsection (d); and

(B) in the case of an individual retired in an officer grade—

(i) was subject to an administrative time-in-grade requirement described in subsection (d) that established a time-in-grade requirement that was longer than the statutory time-in-grade requirement applicable to that member; and

(ii) had served in the grade in which the retiree retired for a period that was less than the period prescribed by such administrative time-in-grade requirement but not less than the statutory time-in-grade requirement applicable to that member.

(c) EARLIER COMPUTATION DATE.—For purposes of subsection (b)(3), the earlier computation date applicable to a military retiree is the date that (under such section 1401a(f) as in effect on the date of the member's retirement) was the "earlier date" that was used as the basis for the computation of the retiree's retired pay.

(d) REGULATIONS SUBJECT TO WAIVER.—A regulation that may be waived under subsection (a) is any regulation (not required by law) that establishes a minimum period of time that a member of the Armed Forces must have served in a grade on active duty in order to be eligible to retire in that grade.

(e) SCOPE OF WAIVER AUTHORITY.—The Secretary concerned may exercise the authority provided in subsection (a) in the case of an individual military retiree or for any group of military retirees.

(1) The USS INDIANAPOLIS served the people of the United States with valor and distinction throughout World War II in action against enemy forces in the Pacific Theater of Operations from 7 December 1941 to 29 July 1945.

(2) The fast and powerful heavy cruiser with its courageous and capable crew, compiled an impressive combat record during her victorious forays across the battle-torn reaches of the Pacific, receiving in the process ten hard-earned Battle Stars from the Aleutians to Okinawa.

(3) This mighty ship repeatedly proved herself a swift, hard-hitting weapon of our Pacific Fleet, rendering invaluable service in anti-shipping, shore bombardments, anti-air and invasion support roles, and serving with honor and great distinction as Fifth Fleet Flagship under Admiral Raymond Spruance, USN, and Third Fleet Flagship under Admiral William F. Halsey, USN.

(4) This gallant ship, owing to her superior speed and record of accomplishment, transported the world's first operational atomic bomb to the Island of Tinian, accomplishing her mission at a record average speed of 29 knots.

(5) Following the accomplishment of her mission, the INDIANAPOLIS departed Tinian for Guam and, thereafter, embarked from Guam for the Leyte Gulf where she was to join with the fleet assembling for the invasion of Japan.

(6) At 0014 hours on 30 July 1945, the USS INDIANAPOLIS was sunk by enemy torpedo action.

(7) Of the approximately 900 members of her crew of 1,198 officers and men who survived the initial torpedo attack, only 319 were eventually rescued because, as a result of the ship's communication ability having been destroyed in the attack, the sinking of the USS INDIANAPOLIS was not discovered for five fateful days, during which the survivors suffered incessant shark attacks, starvation, desperate thirst, and exposure.

(8) From her participation in the earliest offensive actions in the Pacific in World War II to becoming the last capital ship lost in that conflict, the USS INDIANAPOLIS and her crew left an indelible imprint on our nation's struggle to eventual victory.

SEC. 1069. REVIEW OF THE BOTTOM UP REVIEW AND THE FUTURE YEAR DEFENSE PROGRAM AND ESTABLISHMENT OF NEW FUNDING REQUIREMENTS AND PRIORITIES.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress finds as follows:

(1) United States defense policy is to maintain the capability to fight and win two major regional contingencies nearly simultaneously.

(2) The Secretary of Defense conducted the Bottom Up Review during 1993 to structure the Armed Forces for the Post-Cold War period.

(3) The United States military force structure has shrunk dramatically since the 1991 Persian Gulf War and some critical force enhancements will not be deployed for several years.

(4) The Secretary of Defense (in testimony before the Committee on Armed Services of the Senate on February 2, 1994) stated that under current inflation assumptions the Department of Defense's Future Years Defense Program includes approximately $20,000,000,000 more in program funding requests for fiscal years 1996 through 1999 than the defense funding levels projected for the President's budget for those years.

(5) The Secretary of the Navy (in testimony before the Committee on Armed Services of the Senate on March 8, 1994) stated that by 1999 the Department of the Navy will operate only 330 ships, rather than the 346 ships projected in the report on the Bottom Up Review.

(6) The Secretary of Defense, in his January 1994 Annual Report to the President and Congress, reported that the Air Force will field approximately 100 heavy bombers, rather than the "up to 184" assumed in the report on the Bottom Up Review.

(7) The plans of the Department of Defense for a major regional contingency in the Far East call for up to 5 Army divisions and the plans for a major regional contingency in Southwest Asia call for up to 7 Army divisions, while the report on the Bottom Up Review plans for an Army of 10 active divisions and at least 15 enhanced-readiness Army National Guard brigades.

(8) The President's budget for fiscal year 1995 assumes the Department of Defense will save at least $6,000,000,000 from procurement reform.

(9) The first and second rounds of the Base Realignment and Closure Commission have not yet achieved the level of savings initially estimated, and the 1995 base closure round may cost significantly more than is assumed in the President's budget.

(10) United States forces are presently involved in humanitarian relief efforts in or around Rwanda, in a number of air and maritime operations relating to the United Nations operations in Bosnia, and in a variety of operations relating to Iraq, Haiti, Somalia, and Macedonia.

(11) United States forces may be called upon in the future to conduct additional humanitarian and relief missions.

(12) United States forces may be called upon to conduct even more significant operations to enforce a peace agreement in Bosnia and to facilitate the departure from Haiti of the military leadership.

(13) Many of the forces that are participating in these other-than-war or nontraditional operations would be required early on in the event of one or more major regional contingencies.

(14) There are inevitable tradeoffs among spending on force structure, readiness, modernization, personnel, pay, and quality of life.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—In light of the findings in subsection (a), it is the sense of Congress that—

(1) within 30 days after enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Defense should initiate a review of the assumptions and conclusions of the President's budget, the report on the Bottom Up Review, and the Future Years Defense Program, such review to include consideration of the various other-than-war or nontraditional operations in which the United States forces are or may be participating;

(2) not more than 180 days after the review is initiated, the Secretary should submit to the President and Congress a report which—

(A) describes in detail the force structure required to fight and win two major regional contingencies nearly simultaneously in light of other ongoing or potential operations;

(B) may also address possible changes in national security planning or programs, including revised alliance arrangements, increased reliance on reserve component forces, or adjustments to the national military strategy; and

(C) includes an evaluation of an Army configured as 12 active duty divisions, a number of which would be rounded out with National Guard combat units;

(3) not more than 60 days after receipt of the report from the Secretary of Defense, the President should submit to Congress a report detailing the steps the President intends to take to meet the force structure described in the Secretary's report;

(4) future-years defense budgets submitted to Congress by the President should reflect the funding level necessary to support the force structure described in the report;

(5) funding for national defense for fiscal years 1995 through 1997 should be established at a level sufficient to support a force structure adequate to meet a two-war strategy and to ensure that the United States does not have a hollow force;

(6) the force structure to meet the requirements of a two-war strategy represents the minimum level which should be maintained unless the strategy is modified;

(7) whenever possible and consistent with the safety of United States personnel, in deploying military forces in support of operations other than war or other nontraditional operations, the President should seek to use forces other than those identified for early deployment in the event of one or more major regional contingencies; and

(8) the President should be willing to increase defense spending if required to meet new or existing threats.

(1) the environmentally secure containment and management of contaminated dredged materials; and

(2) the decontamination of dredged materials.

(b) MATTERS TO BE INCLUDED.—The plan to be established pursuant to subsection (a) shall include the following:

(1) A description of defense reinvestment and defense conversion programs under chapter 148 of title 10, United States Code, that are available to facilitate the deployment of defense environmental technologies in support of the dredging requirements of dual-use ports.

(A) ports with projects requiring more than 5,000,000 cubic yards of sediment to be dredged annually;

(B) ports with projects requiring more than 1,000,000 cubic yards of sediment to be dredged annually;

(C) ports that have been affected by, or are likely to be affected by, the closure of one or more major military installations and that, as a result thereof, require substantial environmental remediation; and

(D) military port installations that have experienced significant delays in advancing dredging projects because of environmental compliance or dredged material disposal problems.

(4) After consultation with the heads of other appropriate Federal agencies, an assessment of other available technologies and processes that may be used in support of the plan to be established pursuant to subsection (a).

(5) An assessment of the potential benefits and methods of transfer of technologies and processes for use in connection with dredging processes in commercial ports and waterways.

(c) REPORT.—Not later than 180 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Defense shall transmit to Congress a report containing the plan to be established pursuant to subsection (a).

(2) by striking out "under this title" and inserting in lieu thereof "under programs described in section 1203(b)"; and

(3) in paragraph (3), by striking out "this title" and inserting in lieu thereof "the programs described in section 1203(b)".

SEC. 1203. REPORT ON ACCOUNTING FOR UNITED STATES ASSISTANCE.

(a) REPORT.—(1) The Secretary of Defense shall submit to Congress a report on the efforts made by the United States (including efforts through the use of audits, examinations, and on-site inspections) to ensure that assistance provided under cooperative threat reduction programs is fully accounted for and that such assistance is being used for its intended purposes.

The Secretary of Defense shall submit to Congress a report on progress being made in each state of the former Soviet Union that is a recipient of assistance under Cooperative Threat Reduction programs toward the development of an effective system of control and accountability for material related to weapons of mass destruction in that country. Under such a system, officials of the United States and of the recipient country should have an accurate accounting of the weapons of mass destruction in that country and the fissile and chemical materials from those weapons. The report shall be submitted not later than three months after the date of the enactment of this Act.

SEC. 1205. MULTIYEAR PLANNING AND ALLIED SUPPORT.

(a) Funding Report to Congress.—The Secretary of Defense shall submit to Congress a report as described in subsection (b) on funding for Cooperative Threat Reduction programs with states of the former Soviet Union. The report shall be submitted at the time of the transmission to Congress of the budget justification materials for the funding request in the fiscal year 1996 budget for such Cooperative Threat Reduction programs.

(b) Matters To Be Included in Annual Report.—The Secretary of Defense shall include in the report under subsection (a) the following:

(1) An estimate of the total amount that will be required to be expended by the United States in order to achieve the objectives of Cooperative Threat Reduction programs.

SEC. 1206. FUNDING LIMITATIONS ON COOPERATIVE THREAT REDUCTION PROGRAM FOR FISCAL YEAR 1995.

(a) Program Amounts.—Of the amount authorized to be appropriated in section 301 for Cooperative Threat Reduction programs—

(4) not more than $40,000,000 may be obligated for Nonproliferation;

(5) not more than $20,000,000 may be obligated for Defense and Military-to-Military Contacts; and

(6) not more than $20,000,000 may be obligated for other authorized programs and activities.

(b) Limited Authority To Exceed Individual Limitation Amounts.—(1) If the Secretary of Defense determines that it is necessary to do so in the national interest, the Secretary may, subject to paragraph (2), obligate amounts for the purposes stated in any of the paragraphs of subsection (a) in excess of the amount specified for those purposes in that paragraph. However, the total amount obligated for the purposes stated in the paragraphs in subsection (a) may not by reason of the use of the authority provided in the preceding sentence exceed the sum of the amounts specified in those paragraphs.

(2) An obligation for the purposes stated in any of the paragraphs in subsection (a) in excess of the amount specified in that paragraph may be made using the authority provided in paragraph (1) only after—

(A) the Secretary submits to Congress a notification of the intent to do so together with a complete discussion of the justification for doing so; and

(B) 15 days have elapsed following the date of the notification.

SEC. 1207. REPORT ON OFFENSIVE BIOLOGICAL WARFARE PROGRAM OF THE STATES OF THE FORMER SOVIET UNION.

(a) Findings.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The United States has identified nonproliferation of weapons of mass destruction as a high priority in the conduct of United States national security policy.

(2) The United States is seeking universal adherence to global regimes that control nuclear, chemical, and biological weapons and is promoting new measures that provide increased transparency of biological weapons-related activities and facilities in an effort to help deter violations of and enhance compliance with the Biological Weapons Convention.

(3) In early 1992, Russian President Boris Yeltsin indicated to former United States President George Bush that Russia still had an offensive biological weapons program.

(4) A United States Government report dated January 19, 1993, on arms control noncompliance noted that Russian declarations up to that date had dramatically underestimated the size, scope, and maturity of the former Soviet biological weapons program.

(5) Despite President Yeltsin's decree of April 11, 1993, stating that activities in violation of the Biological Weapons Convention are illegal, questions continue to arise regarding offensive biological weapons research, development, testing, production, and storage in Russia as well as in other countries.

(6) A United States Government report, dated June 23, 1994, states the following: "The United States has determined that the offensive biological warfare program that Russia inherited from the Soviet Union violated the Biological Weapons Convention through at least March 1992. The Soviet offensive biological weapons program was massive, and included production, weaponization, and stockpiling. The status of the program since that time remains unclear and the U.S. remains concerned about the Russian biological warfare program.".

(7) The Joint Statement on Biological Weapons issued by officials of the United States, the United Kingdom, and Russia on September 14, 1992, confirmed the commitment of the three governments to full compliance with the Biological Weapons Convention and outlined steps designed to increase confidence in that commitment.

(8) The Presidents of Russia and the United States are scheduled to hold a summit meeting in Washington during the month of September 1994.

(b) Sense of Congress.—It is the sense of Congress that—

(1) the President should continue to urge all signatories to the Biological Weapons Convention to comply fully with the terms of that convention and with other international agreements relating to the control of biological weapons;

(2) the President should keep the Congress fully and currently informed regarding any Russian activities related to offensive biological weapons;

(3) the President should continue to insist that the Russian Government complete the steps noted and agreed to in the Joint Statement on Biological Weapons issued by officials of the United States, the United Kingdom, and Russia on September 14, 1992;

(4) subsequent meetings of representatives of the United States, the United Kingdom, and Russia on biological weapons and the September 1994 summit meeting in Washington provide opportunities for the President to again emphasize the importance of resolving the issues related to compliance with the Biological Weapons Convention;

(5) in assessing the President's fiscal year 1996 budget request for foreign assistance funds for Russia, and for other programs and activities to provide assistance to Russia, including the Cooperative Threat Reduction programs, Congress will consider United States Government assessments of Russia's compliance with its obligations under the Biological Weapons Convention; and

(6) as the President encourages increased transparency of biological weapons-related activities and facilities to deter violations of, and enhance compliance with, the Biological Weapons Convention, the President should also take appropriate actions to ensure that the United States is prepared to counter the effects of use of biological weapons by others.

(c) Presidential Reports.—Not later than February 1, 1995, not later than June 1, 1995, and not later than October 1, 1995, the President shall submit to Congress a report, in classified and unclassified forms, containing an assessment of the extent of compliance of the independent states of the former Soviet Union with the Biological Weapons Convention and other international agreements relating to the control of biological weapons.

(d) Content of Report.—The report shall include the following:

(1) Matters related to compliance.—

(A) An evaluation of the extent of control and oversight by the government of the Russian Federation over the former Soviet military and dual civilian-military biological warfare programs.

(B) The extent, if any, of the biological warfare agent stockpile in any of the independent states of the former Soviet Union.

(C) The extent and scope, if any, of continued biological warfare research, development, testing, and production by such states, including the sites and types of activity at those sites.

(D) An evaluation of the effectiveness of possible delivery systems of biological weapons, including tube and rocket artillery, aircraft, and ballistic missiles.

(E) An assessment of measures taken by the Russian Government to complete the steps noted and agreed to in the 1992 Joint Statement on Biological Weapons referred to in subsection

(b)(3), including a determination of the extent to which Russia has—

(i) agreed to permit visits to military and nonmilitary biological sites in order to attempt to resolve ambiguities;

(ii) provided information about biological weapons dismantlement accomplished to date, and further clarification of information provided in its United Nations Declarations regarding biological weapons;

(iii) been cooperative in exchanging information on a confidential, reciprocal basis concerning past offensive biological weapons programs not recorded in detail in its declarations to the United Nations;

(iv) cooperated in reviewing potential additional measures to monitor compliance with the Biological Weapons Convention and modalities for testing such measures;

(v) agreed to an examination of the physical infrastructure of its biological facilities to determine whether there is specific equipment or excess capacity inconsistent with their stated purpose;

(vi) helped identify ways to promote cooperation and investment in the conversion of biological weapons facilities; and

(vii) agreed to exchanges of scientists at biological facilities on a long-term basis.

(2) MATTERS RELATED TO UNITED STATES CAPABILITIES.—

(A) An evaluation of United States capabilities to detect and monitor biological warfare research, development, testing, production, and storage.

(B) On the basis of the assessment and evaluations referred to in other provisions of the report, recommendations by the Secretary of Defense and Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff for the improvement of United States biological warfare defense and counter-measures.

(e) LIMITATION.—Of the amount authorized to be appropriated by section 301 for Cooperative Threat Reduction programs, $25,000,000 may not be obligated until the President submits to Congress the first report required under subsection (c).

SEC. 1208. COORDINATION OF CERTAIN COOPERATIVE THREAT REDUCTION PROGRAMS.

(a) MILITARY-TO-MILITARY CONTACT PROGRAMS.—(1) None of the funds authorized to be appropriated in section 301 for Cooperative Threat Reduction programs may be obligated for activities under a military-to-military contact program until the Secretary of Defense and the Secretary of State submit to Congress a joint report on the coordination of military-to-military contact programs and comparable activities carried out under their respective jurisdictions.

(2) The report shall cover the following programs and activities:

(A) Defense and military-to-military contact programs to be carried out using funds authorized to be appropriated in section 301 for Cooperative Threat Reduction programs.

(B) Military-to-military contacts and comparable activities that are authorized by section 168 of title 10, United States Code, as added by section 1316.

(C) Programs authorized under chapter 5 of part II of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 (22 U.S.C. 2347 et seq.).

(3) The report shall include a discussion of how the programs and activities referred to in paragraph (2) are carried out to maximize—

(A) the effect of such programs and activities in enhancing United States foreign policy objectives; and

(B) cost-efficiency in the conduct of the programs and activities.

(b) REPORT.—Section 1207 of the Cooperative Threat Reduction Act of 1993 (title XII of Public Law 103–160; 107 Stat. 1777; 22 U.S.C. 5956), is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(5) A description of how all of the activities carried out under the authority of this title and other laws providing authority for cooperative threat reduction are coordinated with similar activities that are carried out under any other authority, including activities relating to military-to-military contacts, environmental restoration, and housing.".

SEC. 1209. SENSE OF CONGRESS CONCERNING SAFE AND SECURE DISMANTLEMENT OF SOVIET NUCLEAR ARSENAL.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) It is a pressing national security challenge for the United States to expedite the safe and secure dismantlement of the nuclear arsenal of the former Soviet Union.

(2) In particular, it is essential to expedite the return of strategic nuclear warheads from Ukraine, Belarus, and Kazakhstan and to expedite the safe and secure dismantlement of the nuclear delivery vehicles of Ukraine, Belarus, and Kazakhstan.

(3) Leakage of nuclear materials and technology, and the continuing threat of emigration of scientists and technicians from the former Soviet nuclear weapons complex, pose a grave threat to United States national security and to international stability.

(4) Congress has authorized so-called "Nunn-Lugar" funds to enable the Department of Defense to carry out cooperative activities with states of the former Soviet Union to address the threats described in paragraphs (1), (2), and (3).

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—In light of the findings in subsection (a), it is the sense of Congress that—

(1) the Secretary of Defense and the Secretary of State should continue to give their serious attention to carrying out a coordinated strategy for addressing the urgent national security issues described in subsection (a);

(2) the United States should expedite the availability and effective application of so-called "Nunn-Lugar" funds;

(3) although activities conducted with those funds should, to the extent feasible, draw upon United States technology and expertise, the United States should work with local contractors in Belarus, Kazakhstan, Russia, and Ukraine when doing so would expedite more effective use of those funds; and

(4) efforts should be made to make the Science and Technology Centers in Moscow and Kiev, designed to slow the emigration of scientists and technicians from the former Soviet weapons complex, fully operational on an expedited basis.

TITLE XIII—MATTERS RELATING TO ALLIES AND OTHER NATIONS

Subtitle A—Matters Relating to NATO

SEC. 1301. COOPERATIVE RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT AGREEMENTS WITH NATO ORGANIZATIONS.

(a) APPLICABILITY OF EXISTING AUTHORITY TO NATO ORGANIZATIONS.—Section 2350a of title 10, United States Code, is amended in subsections (a), (e)(2), and (i)(1) by inserting "or NATO organizations" after "major allies of the United States" each place it appears.

(b) NATO ORGANIZATION DEFINED.—Subsection (i) of such section is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(4) The term 'NATO organization' means any North Atlantic Treaty Organization subsidiary body referred to in section 2350(2) of this title and any other organization of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.".

SEC. 1302. NORTH ATLANTIC TREATY ORGANIZATION.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The North Atlantic Treaty Organization has served as a bulwark of peace, security, and democracy for the United States and the members of the alliance since 1949.

(2) The unswerving resolve of the member states of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization to mutual defense against the threat of communist aggression was central to the demise of the Warsaw Pact.

(3) The North Atlantic Treaty Organization is the most successful international security organization in history and is well suited to help marshal cooperative political, diplomatic, economic, and humanitarian efforts, buttressed by credible military capability aimed at deterring conflict, and thus contributing to international peace and security.

(4) The threat of instability in Eastern and Central Europe, as well as in the Southern and Eastern Mediterranean, continues to pose a fundamental challenge to the interests of the member states of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization.

(5) North Atlantic Treaty Organization assets have been deployed in recent years for more than the territorial defense of alliance members, and the Rome Summit of October 1991 adopted a new strategic concept for the North Atlantic Treaty Organization that entertained the possibility of operations beyond the alliance's self-defense area.

(6) In Oslo in July 1992, and in Brussels in December 1992, the alliance embraced the deployment of North Atlantic Treaty Organization forces to peacekeeping operations under the auspices of the United Nations or the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe.

(7) The North Atlantic Treaty Organization should attempt to cooperate with and seek a mandate from international organizations such as the United Nations when considering responses to crises outside the alliances's self-defense area.

(8) Not all members of the international community share a commonality of interests that would ensure timely action by the United Nations Security Council.

(9) It is critical that the security interests of the member countries of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization not be held hostage to indecision at the United Nations or a veto by a permanent member of the Security Council.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of Congress that—

(1) it should be the policy of the United States that, in accordance with article 53 of the United Nations Charter, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization retains the right of autonomy of action regarding missions in addition to collective defense should the United Nations Security Council or the Conference on Security and Cooperation in Europe fail to act;

(2) while it is desirable to work with other international organizations and arrangements where feasible in dealing with threats to the peace, the North Atlantic Treaty Organization is not an auxiliary to the United Nations or any other organization; and

(3) the member states of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization reserve the right to act collectively in defense of their vital interests.

SEC. 1303. AUTHORIZED END STRENGTH FOR MILITARY PERSONNEL IN EUROPE.

(a) END STRENGTH.—Paragraph (1) of section 1002(c) of the Department of Defense Authorization Act, 1985 (22 U.S.C. 1928 note), is amended to read as follows:

"(1) The end strength level of members of the Armed Forces of the United States assigned to permanent duty ashore in European member nations of the North Atlantic Treaty Organization may not exceed a permanent ceiling of approximately 100,000 in any fiscal year.".

(b) EXCLUSION OF CERTAIN ISLAND-BASED TROOPS IN CALCULATION OF AUTHORIZED END

STRENGTH.—Such section is further amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(3) For purposes of this subsection, members of the Armed Forces of the United States assigned to permanent duty ashore in Iceland, Greenland, and the Azores are excluded in calculating the end strength level of members of the Armed Forces assigned to permanent duty ashore in European member nations of NATO.".

(c) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 1303 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1993 (Public Law 102–484; 106 Stat. 2546) is repealed.

(d) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendment made by subsection (a) shall take effect on October 1, 1995.

SEC. 1304. ALLIED SHARE OF INSTALLATIONS COSTS.

(a) GOAL FOR ALLIED CONTRIBUTIONS.—In continuing efforts to enter into revised host-nation agreements as described in section 1301(e) of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1993 (Public Law 102–484; 106 Stat. 2545) and section 1401(c) of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1994 (Public Law 103–160; 107 Stat. 1824), the President shall seek to have European member nations of NATO assume an increased share of the nonpersonnel costs for United States military installations in those nations so that by September 30, 1996, those nations have assumed 37.5 percent of such costs.

(b) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this section:

(1) The term "nonpersonnel costs", with respect to United States military installations in European member nations of NATO, means costs for those installations other than costs paid from military personnel accounts.

(2) The term "contributions", with respect to the share of such nonpersonnel costs assumed by the European member nations of NATO, means those cash and in-kind contributions made by such nations that replace expenditures that would otherwise be made by the Secretary using funds appropriated or otherwise made available in defense appropriations Acts.

SEC. 1305. PAYMENTS-IN-KIND FOR RELEASE OF UNITED STATES OVERSEAS MILITARY FACILITIES TO NATO HOST COUNTRIES.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The United States has invested $6,500,000,000 in military infrastructure in North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) countries.

(2) As part of an overall plan to reduce United States troop strength overseas, the Department of Defense plans to close, or reduce United States military presence at, 867 military sites outside the United States.

(3) Most of the military sites outside the United States announced for closure are in Europe, where the United States has already closed 434 such sites while carrying out a reduction in troop strength in Europe from 323,432 in 1987 to approximately 100,000 by the end of fiscal year 1996.

(4) When the United States closes military sites in Europe, it leaves buildings, roads, sewers, and other real property improvements behind.

(5) Some of the European NATO allies have agreed to pay the United States for the residual value of the real property improvements left behind.

(6) Although the United States military drawdown has been rapid since 1990, European allies have been slow to pay the United States the residual value of the sites released by the United States.

(7) As of 1994, the United States has recouped only $33,300,000 in cash, most of which was recovered in 1989.

(8) Although the United States has released to Germany over 60 percent of the military sites planned for closure by the United States in that country and the current value of United States facilities to be returned to the German government is estimated at approximately $2,700,000,000, the German government has budgeted only $25,000,000 for fiscal year 1994 for payment of compensation for the United States investment in those facilities.

(b) POLICY.—It is the sense of Congress that—

(1) the President should redouble efforts to recover the value of the United States investment in the military infrastructure in NATO countries;

(2) the President should enter into negotiations with the government of each NATO host country with a presumption that payments to compensate the United States for the negotiated value of improvements will be made in cash and deposited in the Department of Defense Overseas Military Facility Investment Recovery Account;

(3) the President should enter into negotiations for payments-in-kind only as a last resort and only after informing the Congress that negotiations for cash payments have not been successful; and

(4) to the extent that in-kind contributions are received in lieu of cash payments in any fiscal year, the in-kind contributions should be used for projects that are identified priorities of the Department of Defense.

(c) REQUIREMENTS AND LIMITATIONS RELATING TO PAYMENTS-IN-KIND.—(1) Subsection (e) of section 2921 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1991 (10 U.S.C. 2687 note) is amended—

(A) by inserting "(1)" after "NEGOTIATIONS FOR PAYMENTS-IN-KIND.—";

(B) by striking out "a written notice" and all that follows and inserting in lieu thereof "to the appropriate congressional committees a written notice regarding the intended negotiations."; and

(C) by adding at the end the following new paragraphs:

"(2) The notice shall contain the following:

"(A) A justification for entering into negotiations for payments-in-kind with the host country.

"(B) The types of benefit options to be pursued by the Secretary in the negotiations.

"(C) A discussion of the adjustments that are intended to be made in the future-years defense program or in the budget of the Department of Defense for the fiscal year in which the notice is submitted or the following fiscal year in order to reflect costs that it may no longer be necessary for the United States to incur as a result of the payments-in-kind to be sought in the negotiations.

"(3) For purposes of this subsection, the appropriate congressional committees are—

"(A) the Committee on Armed Services, the Committee on Appropriations, and the Defense Subcommittees of the Committee on Appropriations of the House of Representatives; and

"(B) the Committee on Armed Services, the Committee on Appropriations, and the Defense Subcommittees of the Committee on Appropriations of the Senate.".

(2) Such section is further amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(h) CONGRESSIONAL OVERSIGHT OF PAYMENTS-IN-KIND.—(1) Not less than 30 days before concluding an agreement for acceptance of military construction or facility improvements as a payment-in-kind, the Secretary of Defense shall submit to Congress a notification on the proposed agreement. Any such notification shall contain the following:

"(A) A description of the military construction project or facility improvement project, as the case may be.

"(B) A certification that the project is needed by United States forces.

"(C) An explanation of how the project will aid in the achievement of the mission of those forces.

"(D) A certification that, if the project were to be carried out by the Department of Defense, appropriations would be necessary for the project and it would be necessary to provide for the project in the next future-years defense program.

"(2) Not less than 30 days before concluding an agreement for acceptance of host nation support or host nation payment of operating costs of United States forces as a payment-in-kind, the Secretary of Defense shall submit to Congress a notification on the proposed agreement. Any such notification shall contain the following:

"(A) A description of each activity to be covered by the payment-in-kind.

"(B) A certification that the costs to be covered by the payment-in-kind are included in the budget of one or more of the military departments or that it will otherwise be necessary to provide for payment of such costs in a budget of one or more of the military departments.

"(C) A certification that, unless the payment-in-kind is accepted or funds are appropriated for payment of such costs, the military mission of the United States forces with respect to the host nation concerned will be adversely affected.".

SEC. 1306. GEORGE C. MARSHALL EUROPEAN CENTER FOR SECURITY STUDIES.

(a) USE OF CONTRIBUTIONS.—Funds received by the United States Government from the Federal Republic of Germany as its fair share of the costs of the George C. Marshall European Center for Security Studies shall be credited to appropriations available to the Department of Defense for the George C. Marshall European Center for Security Studies. Funds so credited shall be merged with the appropriations to which credited and shall be available for the Center for the same purposes and the same period as the appropriations with which merged.

(b) WAIVER OF CHARGES.—(1) The Secretary of Defense may waive reimbursement of the costs of conferences, seminars, courses of instruction, or similar educational activities of the George C. Marshall European Center for Security Studies for military officers and civilian officials of cooperation partner states of the North Atlantic Cooperation Council or the Partnership for Peace if the Secretary determines that attendance by such personnel without reimbursement is in the national security interest of the United States.

(2) Costs for which reimbursement is waived pursuant to paragraph (1) shall be paid from appropriations available for the Center.

SEC. 1307. SENSE OF THE SENATE CONCERNING PARTICIPATION IN ALLIED DEFENSE COOPERATION.

It is the sense of the Senate that the President should use existing authorities to the greatest extent possible to authorize the provision of the following types of assistance and cooperation to countries that are participating in the Partnership for Peace and are making significant progress in working with the North Atlantic Treaty Organization:

(1) Defense articles and services, as defined in the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 and the Arms Export Control Act.

(2) Loan of materials, supplies, and equipment for research and development purposes.

(3) Leases and loans of major defense equipment and other defense articles.

(4) Cooperative military airlift agreements.

(5) The procurement of communications support and related supplies and services.

(6) Actions to standardize equipment with North Atlantic Treaty Organization members.

Subtitle B—Matters Relating to Several Countries

SEC. 1311. LIMITATION ON OBLIGATION OF FUNDS FOR OVERSEAS BASING ACTIVITIES.

(a) Limitation.—The total amount authorized to be appropriated to the Department of Defense for operation and maintenance and for military construction (including construction and improvement of military family housing) that is obligated to conduct overseas basing activities during fiscal year 1995 may not exceed $8,181,000,000, except to the extent provided by the Secretary of Defense under subsection (b).

(b) Exception.—The Secretary of Defense may increase the amount of the limitation under subsection (a) by such amount as the Secretary determines to be necessary in the national interest, except that such increase may not exceed $400,000,000. The Secretary may not make any such increase until the Secretary notifies the Congress of the Secretary's intent to make such an increase and a period of 15 days elapses after the day on which the notification is received by the Congress.

(c) Allocations of Savings.—Any amounts appropriated to the Department of Defense for fiscal year 1995 for the purposes covered by subsection (a) that are not available to be used for those purposes by reason of the limitation in that subsection shall be allocated by the Secretary of Defense for operation and maintenance and for military construction activities of the Department of Defense at military installations and facilities located inside the United States.

(d) Definition.—In this section, the term "overseas basing activities" has the meaning given such term in section 1401(d)(2) of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1994 (Public Law 103–160; 107 Stat. 1825), except that such term does not include activities of the Department of Defense for which funds are provided through appropriations for Military Personnel.

SEC. 1312. CLARIFICATION AND CODIFICATION OF OVERSEAS MILITARY END STRENGTH LIMITATION.

(a) Policy.—It is the policy of the United States that the North Atlantic Treaty Organization (NATO) allies should assist the United States in paying the incremental costs incurred by the United States for maintaining members of the Armed Forces in assignments to permanent duty ashore in European member nations of NATO solely for support of NATO roles and missions.

(b) Implementation.—The President shall take all necessary actions to ensure the effective implementation of the policy set forth in subsection (a).

(5) An assessment of any implications for regional security effected by existing cooperative military relationships.

SEC. 1315. REVIEW AND REPORT REGARDING DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE PROGRAMS RELATING TO REGIONAL SECURITY AND HOST NATION DEVELOPMENT IN THE WESTERN HEMISPHERE.

(a) Findings.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The political environment in the Western Hemisphere has been characterized in recent years by significant democratic advances and an absence of international strife, but democracy in some nations of the region is fragile.

(2) It is desirable for the Department of Defense to perform a positive role in influencing the defense establishments and military forces of nations in the Western Hemisphere to make positive contributions to the democratic process and to domestic development programs of their respective nations.

(3) Congress receives a number of annual reports relating to specific authorities granted to the Secretary of Defense under title 10, United States Code, such as the authorities relating to the conduct of bilateral or regional cooperation programs under section 1051 of that title, participation of developing countries in combined exercises under section 2010 of that title, and the training of special operations forces with friendly forces under section 2011 of that title.

(4) The annual reports are replete with statistics and dollar figures and generally lacking in substance.

(5) Congress does not receive annual reports with respect to other authorities of the Secretary of Defense, such as that relating to Latin American cooperation under section 1050 of title 10, United States Code.

(6) Testimony before Congress (including in particular the testimony of the commander of the United States Southern Command and the commander of the United States Atlantic Command) has emphasized the conduct of a large number of complementary programs under the leadership and supervision of those two commanders to foster appropriate military roles in democratic host nations and to assist countries in developing forces properly trained to address their security needs, including needs regarding illegal immigration, insurgencies, smuggling of illegal arms, munitions, and explosives across borders, and drug trafficking.

(7) Most of the programs referred to in paragraph (6) provide excellent and often unique training and experience to the United States forces involved.

(8) Military-to-military contact programs in the Western Hemisphere provide another tool to encourage a democratic orientation of the defense establishments and military forces of countries in the region.

(9) There is a need for the Secretary of Defense to conduct a comprehensive review of the several authorities in title 10, United States Code, for the Secretary of Defense to engage in cooperative regional security programs with other countries in the Western Hemisphere in order to determine whether the authorities continue to be appropriate and necessary, particularly in the light of the changed circumstances in the region.

(10) There is a need for the Secretary of Defense to conduct a comprehensive review of various programs carried out pursuant to such authorities to ensure that such programs are designed to meet the needs of the host nations involved and the regional strategic and foreign policy objectives of the United States, including promotion of sustainable development, effective control of the military by elected civilian authorities, reliable regional security accords, and the appropriate role for militaries in democratic societies.

(11) There is a need for the Secretary of Defense to assess the strengths and weaknesses of the various regional security organizations, defense forums, and defense education institutions in the Western Hemisphere in order to identify any improvements needed to harmonize the defense policies of the United States and those of friendly nations of the region.

(b) REVIEW AND REPORT.—Not later than May 1, 1995, the Secretary of Defense, shall—

(1) in consultation with the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff and the commanders of the combatant commands responsible for regions in the Western Hemisphere, carry out a comprehensive review and assessment of the matters referred to in paragraphs (2), (9), (10), and (11) of subsection (a); and

(2) submit to Congress a report on the review and assessment carried out pursuant to paragraph (1).

(c) CONTENT OF REPORT.—The report shall contain a detailed and comprehensive description, discussion, and analysis of the following:

(1) The Department of Defense plan to support United States strategic objectives in the Western Hemisphere.

(2) The external and internal threats to the national security of the nations of the region.

(3) The various regional security cooperative programs carried out by the Department of Defense in the region in 1994, including training and education programs in the host nations and in the United States and defense contacts set forth on a country-by-country basis, the statutory authority, if any, for such programs, and the strategic objectives served.

(4) The various regional security organizations, defense forums, and defense education institutions that the United States maintains or in which the United States participates.

(5) The contribution that such programs, defense contacts, organizations, forums, and institutions make to the advancement of regional security, host nation security and national development, United States strategic objectives, and United States foreign policy objectives as described in paragraph (10) of subsection (a).

(6) United States humanitarian civic assistance and civic action programs conducted with host countries in the region and the effect that those programs have had in furthering the objectives described in paragraph (10) of subsection (a).

(7) The changes made or to be made in the programs, organizations, forums, and institutions referred to in paragraphs (3), (4), (5), and (6) as a result of the comprehensive review.

(d) RECOMMENDED LEGISLATION.—The report shall include any recommendations for legislation that the Secretary considers necessary to improve the ability of the Department to achieve its strategic objectives in the Western Hemisphere.

(e) CLASSIFICATION OF REPORT.—The report shall be submitted in an unclassified form and may, if necessary, have a classified supplement.

Subtitle C—Matters Relating to Specific Countries

SEC. 1321. DEFENSE COOPERATION BETWEEN THE UNITED STATES AND ISRAEL.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The President has reiterated the longstanding United States commitment to maintaining the qualitative superiority of the Israeli Defense Force over any combination of adversaries.

(2) Congress continues to recognize the many benefits to the United States from its strategic relationship with Israel, including enhancing regional stability and technical cooperation.

(3) Despite the momentous peace process in which Israel and its neighbors are productively engaged, Israel continues to face difficult threats to its national security that are compounded by the proliferation of weapons of mass destruction and ballistic missiles.

(4) Congress is supportive of the objective of the President to enhance United States-Israel military and technical cooperation, particularly in the areas of missile defense and counter-proliferation.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of Congress that—

(1) the President should ensure that any conventional defense system or technology offered for release to any NATO or other major non-NATO ally should concurrently be available for purchase by Israel unless such action would contravene United States national interests; and

(2) the President should make available to Israel, within existing technology transfer laws, regulations, and policies, advanced United States technology necessary for continued progress in cooperative United States-Israel research and development of theater missile defenses.

SEC. 1322. READINESS OF MILITARY FORCES OF THE REPUBLIC OF KOREA.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) Under existing security arrangements between the United States and the Republic of Korea, responsibility for the defense of the territory of the Republic of Korea is allocated so that the Republic of Korea has primary responsibility for the ground defense of its territory and the United States has primary responsibility for air and sea defense of the Korean peninsula and for reinforcement.

(2) The Force Improvement Program of the Republic of Korea has not fully addressed critical shortfalls in its ground force capability which continue to exist even though the Republic of Korea spends approximately $12,000,000,000 annually on defense while the Democratic People's Republic of Korea spends approximately $4,000,000,000 annually on defense. The Republic of Korea has directed substantial defense resources to procuring submarines, destroyers, advanced aircraft, and other military systems that are marginal to its primary ground defense responsibility.

(3) The defense acquisition decisions of the Republic of Korea have had the effect of not allowing the Republic of Korea to attain self-sufficiency in its ground defense responsibility. As a result, there exists an undue burden on the United States for the ground defense of the Korean peninsula.

(4) The lack of intelligence capability to forecast the military intentions of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea presents major problems for the combined United States-Republic of Korea defense of South Korea.

(5) A short-warning attack by the Democratic People's Republic of Korea would cause major losses to the combined United States-Republic of Korea ground force.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of Congress that the President should urge the Republic of Korea to continue to improve its military ground forces with emphasis on counterartillery capabilities, defense against ballistic missiles and weapons of mass destruction, combined United States-Republic of Korea logistics capabilities, combined United States-Republic of Korea medical support, and combined United States-Republic of Korea capabilities for tactical intelligence and indications and warning of a North Korean attack.

(c) REPORT.—Not later than January 15, 1995, the Secretary of Defense shall submit to Congress a report, in classified form, on—

(1) the readiness of the military forces of the Republic of Korea to defeat an attack by the military forces of the Democratic People's Republic of Korea; and

(2) the adequacy of the defense acquisition strategy of the Republic of Korea to meet its primary ground defense mission.

SEC. 1323. MILITARY PLANNING FOR THE SIZE AND STRUCTURE OF A FORCE REQUIRED FOR A MAJOR REGIONAL CONTINGENCY ON THE KOREAN PENINSULA.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The Secretary of Defense conducted the Bottom-Up Review during 1993 to establish the size and structure for the Armed Forces for the Post-Cold-War era.

(2) The report on the Bottom-Up Review cites the need for the Armed Forces to be large enough to prevail in two major regional conflicts "nearly simultaneously".

(3) The report on the Bottom-Up Review gives special consideration to a scenario that hypothesizes that the two "nearly simultaneous" conflicts would occur in Korea and the Persian Gulf.

(4) The United States sent 7 Army divisions, the equivalent of 10 Air Force tactical fighter wings, 70 heavy bombers, 6 Navy aircraft carrier battle groups, and 5 Marine Corps brigades to the Persian Gulf to fight the war against Iraq.

(5) The report on the Bottom-Up Review asserts that the forces needed to fight two conflicts similar to that with Iraq can be drawn from a total military force of between 15 and 16 Army divisions, 20 Air Force tactical fighter wings, up to 184 heavy bombers, 11 active Navy aircraft carriers (along with one reserve/training carrier), and the equivalent of 12 Marine Corps brigades.

(6) The report on the Bottom-Up Review recognizes that approximately 100,000 members of the Armed Forces will be stationed in Europe.

(7) The report on the Bottom-Up Review recognizes that sizeable numbers of United States forces could be involved in peace enforcement and intervention operations at any one time.

(8) The report on the Bottom-Up Review makes no specific recommendation as to the number of forces to be held in reserve to provide a rotation base either to relieve troops in the event one or both hypothetical conflicts result in lengthy deployments or to replace combat losses.

(9) Military planners calculate that 430,000 or more United States military personnel may be needed to win a war with North Korea begun by an invasion of South Korea by North Korea.

(10) In a worst case scenario, the size of the force military planners may request to help defend South Korea could exceed the levels that are consistent with the recommendations of the report on the Bottom-Up Review if the existing and future force requirements for a presence in Europe, possible peace enforcement operations, and an adequate rotation base, as well as a second regional conflict, must be fulfilled simultaneously.

(11) The Bottom-Up review was conducted for the purpose of force-sizing and was not meant to constrain operational planning.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS CONCERNING BUR.—It is the sense of Congress that—

(1) the force structure identified in the report on the Bottom-Up Review should not be used to limit the size or structure of the force that United States military commanders may request in preparation for a major regional contingency on the Korean peninsula; and

(2) the conclusions of the Bottom-Up Review should be continuously examined in light of the lessons learned from preparation for a major regional contingency on the Korean peninsula and from other military operations.

(c) SENSE OF CONGRESS CONCERNING SITUATION ON KOREAN PENINSULA.—It is the sense of Congress that the chairmen and ranking minority members of the Committees on Armed Services and chairmen and ranking minority members of the Appropriations Subcommittees on Defense of the Senate and House of Representatives should receive regular briefings from the Secretary of Defense on the situation on the Korean peninsula.

SEC. 1324. SENSE OF CONGRESS CONCERNING THE NORTH KOREAN NUCLEAR WEAPONS DEVELOPMENT PROGRAM.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) Between 1950 and 1953, the United States led a military coalition that successfully repelled an invasion of the Republic of Korea by North Korea, at a cost of more than 54,000 American lives.

(2) The United States and the Republic of Korea ratified a Mutual Security Treaty in 1954 that commits the United States to helping the Republic of Korea defend itself against external aggression.

(3) Approximately 37,000 United States military personnel are presently stationed in the Republic of Korea.

(4) The United States and the Republic of Korea have regularly conducted joint military exercises, including "Team Spirit" exercises.

(5) North Korea has built up an armed force nearly twice the size of that in the Republic of Korea and has not renounced the use of force, terrorism, and subversion in its attempts to subdue and subjugate the Republic of Korea.

(6) Although North Korea signed the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons in 1985, it has impeded the international inspection of its nuclear facilities that is required of all signatories of that Treaty.

(7) North Korea's nuclear weapons and ballistic missile programs represent a grave threat to the security of the Korean peninsula and the entire world.

(8) Efforts in recent years by the United States to reduce tensions on the Korean peninsula have included—

(A) the withdrawal of all nuclear weapons from the territory of the Republic of Korea and a reduction in the number of United States military personnel stationed there;

(B) the postponement of the 1994 Team Spirit exercises;

(C) the establishment of direct diplomatic contacts with the North Korean government; and

(D) the offer of expanded diplomatic and economic contacts with North Korea.

(9) Weapons-grade plutonium can be extracted from the fuel rods removed from North Korea's principal reactor at Yongbyon.

(10) International inspectors were not permitted to examine and test in a timely manner spent fuel rods removed from North Korea's principal nuclear reactor at Yongbyon, as required to ensure compliance with North Korea's obligations under the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty.

(11) Diplomacy concerning the North Korean nuclear program has clearly reached a crucial stage, the unsatisfactory resolution of which would place the international nonproliferation regime in jeopardy and threaten the peace and security of the Korean peninsula, the Northeast Asia region, and, by extension, the rest of the world.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of Congress that—

(1) the announced freeze on the North Korean nuclear program should remain in place until internationally agreed-upon safeguards of any North Korean civilian nuclear program can be made fully effective;

(d) GENERAL UNITED STATES POLICY.—The United States should exercise leadership within the international community to cause the Bosnian Serb faction to accept the Contact Group proposal. Such action should be taken on separate but complementary international and unilateral tracks, as set forth in subsections (e), (f), and (g).

(e) INTERNATIONAL POLICY.—If the Bosnian Serbs do not accept the Contact Group proposal by the date that is the later of October 15, 1994, or the end of the 10-day period beginning on the date of the enactment of this Act, the President (or his representative) should, not later than 14 days thereafter, formally introduce and support in the United Nations Security Council a resolution to terminate the Bosnia arms embargo. (c) FISCAL YEAR 1995 AMOUNT.—Of the funds authorized to be appropriated by section 201(4) for technical studies, support, and analysis (PE 605104D), up to $2,000,000 shall be available for studies relating to United States counterproliferation policy.

SEC. 1506. RESTRICTION RELATING TO SUBMISSION OF REPORT ON PROLIFERATION OF FOREIGN MILITARY SATELLITES.

None of the funds available to the Department of Defense may be expended for travel by the Assistant Secretary of Defense for International Security Policy until the Secretary of Defense submits to Congress the report required by section 1363 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1993 (Public Law 102–484; 106 Stat. 2560).

SEC. 1507. LIMITATION ON FUNDS FOR STUDIES PENDING RECEIPT OF PREVIOUSLY REQUIRED REPORT.

(a) LIMITATION.—Of the total amount specified in section 1505 for counterproliferation activities for fiscal year 1995, $1,000,000 shall be withheld from obligation until the report described in subsection (b) has been submitted to Congress.

(b) REPORT.—The report referred to in subsection (a) is the report required to be submitted to Congress not later than May 30, 1994, pursuant to section 1422 of the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1994 (Public Law 103–160; 107 Stat. 1829).

SEC. 1508. SENSE OF CONGRESS CONCERNING INDEFINITE EXTENSION OF NUCLEAR NON-PROLIFERATION TREATY.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) The Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons, signed at Washington, D.C., London, and Moscow on July 1, 1968, is the centerpiece of global efforts to prevent the spread of nuclear weapons.

(2) The United States has demonstrated longstanding support for that treaty and related efforts to prevent the spread of nuclear weapons.

(3) President Clinton has declared that preventing the spread of nuclear weapons is one of the highest priorities of his Administration.

(4) In April 1995, the parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons will convene a conference in New York City to discuss the indefinite extension of the treaty.

(5) The policy of the President is to seek at that conference the indefinite and unconditional extension of that treaty.

(b) SENSE OF CONGRESS.—It is the sense of Congress that—

(1) the President has the full support of Congress in seeking the indefinite and unconditional extension of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons;

(2) the President, when formulating and implementing other elements of nonproliferation policy of the United States (including United States counterproliferation doctrine, the Nuclear Posture Review, and nuclear testing policy), should take into account the objectives of the United States at the 1995 conference of the parties to the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons; and

(3) the President and the President's senior national security advisers should dedicate themselves to ensuring the indefinite and unconditional extension of the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons at the 1995 conference for that treaty.

SEC. 1509. NEGOTIATION OF LIMITATIONS ON NUCLEAR WEAPONS TESTING.

(a) FINDINGS.—Congress makes the following findings:

(1) On January 25, 1994, the United States and 37 other nations began negotiations for a comprehensive treaty to ban permanently all nuclear weapons testing.

(2) On March 14, 1994, the President extended the current United States moratorium on nuclear weapons testing through September 1995.

(3) The United States is seeking to extend indefinitely the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons at the conference of the parties to the Treaty to be held in New York City in April 1995.

(4) Conclusion of a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty could contribute toward successful negotiations to extend the Treaty on the Non-Proliferation of Nuclear Weapons.

(5) Agreements to eliminate nuclear weapons testing and to control the spread of nuclear weapons could contribute to the national security of the United States, its allies, and other nations around the world.

(b) STATEMENT OF CONGRESSIONAL POLICY.—In view of the findings set forth in subsection (a), Congress—

(1) applauds the President for maintaining the United States moratorium on nuclear weapons testing and for taking a leadership role toward negotiation of a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty;

(2) encourages all nuclear powers to refrain from conducting nuclear explosions, before the conclusion of a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty; and

(3) urges the Conference on Disarmament to make all possible progress toward a comprehensive nuclear test ban treaty by the end of 1994.

"§14002. Reserve active-status lists: requirement for each armed force

"(a) The Secretary of each military department shall maintain a single list, to be known as the reserve active-status list, for each armed force under the Secretary's jurisdiction. That list shall include the names of all reserve officers of that armed force who are in an active status other than those on an active-duty list described in section 620 of this title or warrant officers (including commissioned warrant officers).

"(b) The reserve active-status list for the Army shall include officers in the Army Reserve and the Army National Guard of the United States. "(b) EFFECT ON POSITION HELD BY REASON OF TEMPORARY APPOINTMENT OR ASSIGNMENT.—An officer whose position on the reserve active-status list results from service under a temporary appointment or in a grade held by reason of assignment to a position has, when that appointment or assignment ends, the grade and position on that list that the officer would have held if the officer had not received that appointment or assignment.

"§14101. Convening of selection boards

"(a) PROMOTION BOARDS.—(1) Whenever the needs of the Army, Navy, Air Force, or Marine Corps require, the Secretary concerned shall convene a selection board to recommend for promotion to the next higher grade, under chapter 1405 of this title, officers on the reserve active-status list of that armed force in a permanent grade from first lieutenant through brigadier general or, in the case of the Naval Reserve, lieutenant (junior grade) through rear admiral (lower half). A selection board convened under this subsection shall be known as a 'promotion board'.

"(2) A promotion board convened to recommend reserve officers of the Army or reserve officers of the Air Force for promotion (A) to fill a position vacancy under section 14315 of this title, or (B) to the grade of brigadier general or major general, shall (except in the case of a board convened to consider officers as provided in section 14301(e) of this title) be known as a 'vacancy promotion board'. Any other promotion board convened under this subsection shall be known as a 'mandatory promotion board'.

"(b) CONTINUATION BOARDS.—Whenever the needs of the Army, Navy, Air Force, or Marine Corps require, the Secretary concerned may convene a selection board to recommend officers of that armed force—

"(1) for continuation on the reserve active-status list under section 14701 of this title;

"(2) for selective early removal from the reserve active-status list under section 14704 of this title; or

"(3) for selective early retirement under section 14705 of this title.

A selection board convened under this subsection shall be known as a 'continuation board'.

"§14102. Selection boards: appointment and composition

"(a) APPOINTMENT.—Members of selection boards convened under section 14101 of this title shall be appointed by the Secretary of the military department concerned in accordance with this section. Promotion boards and special selection boards shall consist of five or more officers. Continuation boards shall consist of three or more officers. All of the officers of any such selection board shall be of the same armed force as the officers under consideration by the board.

"(b) COMPOSITION.—At least one-half of the members of such a selection board shall be reserve officers, to include at least one reserve officer from each reserve component from which officers are to be considered by the board. Each member of a selection board must hold a permanent grade higher than the grade of the officers under consideration by the board, and no member of a board may hold a grade below major or lieutenant commander.

"(c) REPRESENTATION OF COMPETITIVE CATEGORIES.—(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), a selection board shall include at least one officer from each competitive category of officers to be considered by the board.

"(2) A selection board need not include an officer from a competitive category to be considered by the board if there is no officer of that competitive category on the reserve active-status list or the active-duty list in a permanent grade higher than the grade of the officers to be considered by the board and otherwise eligible to serve on the board. However, in such a case, the Secretary of the military department concerned, in his discretion, may appoint as a member of the board a retired officer of that competitive category who is in the same armed force as the officers under consideration by the board who holds a higher grade than the grade of the officers under consideration.

"(d) PROHIBITION OF SERVICE ON CONSECUTIVE PROMOTION BOARDS.—No officer may be a member of two successive promotion boards convened under section 14101(a) of this title for the consideration of officers of the same competitive category and grade if the second of the two boards is to consider any officer who was considered and not recommended for promotion to the next higher grade by the first of the two boards.

"§14103. Oath of members

"Each member of a selection board convened under section 14101 of this title shall take an oath to perform the duties of a member of the board without prejudice or partiality, having in view both the special fitness of officers and the efficiency of the member's armed force.

"§14104. Confidentiality of board proceedings

"Except as otherwise authorized or required by law, the proceedings of a selection board convened under section 14101 of this title may not be disclosed to any person not a member of the board.

"§14105. Notice of convening of promotion board

"(a) REQUIRED NOTICE.—At least 30 days before a promotion board is convened under section 14101(a) of this title to consider officers in a grade and competitive category for promotion to the next higher grade, the Secretary concerned shall either (1) notify in writing the officers eligible for consideration by the board for promotion regarding the convening of the board, or (2) issue a general written notice to the armed force concerned regarding the convening of the board.

"(b) CONTENT OF NOTICE.—A notice under subsection (a) shall include the date on which the board is to convene and (except in the case of a vacancy promotion board) the name and date of rank of the junior officer, and of the senior officer, in the promotion zone as of the date of the notice.

"§14106. Communication with board by officers under consideration

"Subject to regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the military department concerned, an officer eligible for consideration by a promotion board convened under section 14101(a) of this title who is in the promotion zone or above the promotion zone, or who is to be considered by a vacancy promotion board, may send a written communication to the board calling attention to any matter concerning the officer which the officer considers important to the officer's case. Any such communication shall be sent so as to arrive not later than the date on which the board convenes. The board shall give consideration to any timely communication under this section.

"§14107. Information furnished by the Secretary concerned to promotion boards

"(a) INTEGRITY OF THE PROMOTION SELECTION BOARD PROCESS.—(1) The Secretary of Defense shall prescribe regulations governing information furnished to selection boards convened under section 14101(a) of this title. Those regulations shall apply uniformly among the military departments. Any regulations prescribed by the Secretary of a military department to supplement those regulations may not take effect without the approval of the Secretary of Defense in writing.

"(2) No information concerning a particular eligible officer may be furnished to a selection board except for the following:

"(A) Information that is in the officer's official military personnel file and that is provided to the selection board in accordance with the regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Defense pursuant to paragraph (1).

"(B) Other information that is determined by the Secretary of the military department concerned, after review by that Secretary in accordance with standards and procedures set out in the regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Defense pursuant to paragraph (1), to be substantiated, relevant information that could reasonably and materially affect the deliberations of the promotion board.

"(C) Subject to such limitations as may be prescribed in those regulations, information communicated to the board by the officer in accordance with this section, section 14106 of this title (including any comment on information referred to in subparagraph (A) regarding that officer), or other applicable law.

"(D) A factual summary of the information described in subparagraphs (A), (B), and (C) that, in accordance with the regulations prescribed pursuant to paragraph (1) is prepared by administrative personnel for the purpose of facilitating the work of the selection board.

"(3) Information provided to a promotion board in accordance with paragraph (2) shall be made available to all members of the board and shall be made a part of the record of the board. Communication of such information shall be in a written form or in the form of an audio or video recording. If a communication is in the form of an audio or video recording, a written transcription of the recording shall also be made a part of the record of the promotion board.

"(4) Paragraphs (2) and (3) do not apply to the furnishing of appropriate administrative processing information to the promotion board by an administrative staff designated to assist the board, but only to the extent that oral communications are necessary to facilitate the work of the board.

"(5) Information furnished to a promotion board that is described in subparagraph (B), (C), or (D) of paragraph (2) may not be furnished to a later promotion board unless—

"(A) the information has been properly placed in the official military personnel file of the officer concerned; or

"(B) the information is provided to the later selection board in accordance with paragraph (2).

"(6)(A) Before information described in paragraph (2)(B) regarding an eligible officer is furnished to a selection board, the Secretary of the military department concerned shall ensure—

"(i) that such information is made available to such officer; and

"(ii) that the officer is afforded a reasonable opportunity to submit comments on that information to the promotion board.

"(B) If an officer cannot be given access to the information referred to in subparagraph (A) because of its classification status, the officer shall, to the maximum extent practicable, be furnished an appropriate summary of the information.

"(b) INFORMATION TO BE FURNISHED.—The Secretary of the military department concerned shall furnish to a promotion board convened under section 14101(a) of this title the following:

"(1) In the case of a mandatory promotion board, the maximum number (as determined in accordance with section 14307 of this title) of officers in each competitive category under consideration that the board is authorized to recommend for promotion to the next higher grade.

"(2) The name of each officer in each competitive category under consideration who is to be considered by the board for promotion.

"(3) The pertinent records (as determined by the Secretary) of each officer whose name is furnished to the board.

"(4) Information or guidelines relating to the needs of the armed force concerned for officers having particular skills, including (except in the case of a vacancy promotion board) guidelines or information relating to either a minimum number or a maximum number of officers with particular skills within a competitive category.

"(5) Such other information or guidelines as the Secretary concerned may determine to be necessary to enable the board to perform its functions.

"(c) LIMITATION ON MODIFYING FURNISHED INFORMATION.—Information or guidelines furnished to a selection board under subsection (a) may not be modified, withdrawn, or supplemented after the board submits its report to the Secretary of the military department concerned pursuant to section 14109(a) of this title. However, in the case of a report returned to a board pursuant to section 14110(a) of this title for further proceedings because of a determination by the Secretary of the military department concerned that the board acted contrary to law, regulation, or guidelines, the Secretary may modify, withdraw, or supplement such information or guidelines as part of a written explanation to the board as provided in that section.

"(d) OFFICERS IN HEALTH-PROFESSIONS COMPETITIVE CATEGORIES.—The Secretary of each military department, under uniform regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Defense, shall include in guidelines furnished to a promotion board convened under section 14101(a) of this title that is considering officers in a health-professions competitive category for promotion to a grade below colonel or, in the case of officers of the Naval Reserve, captain, a direction that the board give consideration to an officer's clinical proficiency and skill as a health professional to at least as great an extent as the board gives to the officer's administrative and management skills.

"§14108. Recommendations by promotion boards

"(a) RECOMMENDATION OF BEST QUALIFIED OFFICERS.—A promotion board convened under section 14101(a) of this title shall recommend for promotion to the next higher grade those officers considered by the board whom the board considers best qualified for promotion within each competitive category considered by the board or, in the case of a vacancy promotion board, among those officers considered to fill a vacancy. In determining those officers who are best qualified for promotion, the board shall give due consideration to the needs of the armed force concerned for officers with particular skills (as noted in the guidelines or information furnished the board under sections 14107 of this title).

"(b) MAJORITY REQUIRED.—A promotion board convened under section 14101(a) of this title may not recommend an officer for promotion unless—

"(1) the officer receives the recommendation of a majority of the members of the board; and

"(2) a majority of the members of the board finds that the officer is fully qualified for promotion.

"(c) BOARD RECOMMENDATION REQUIRED FOR PROMOTION.—Except as otherwise provided by law, an officer on the reserve active-status list may not be promoted to a higher grade under chapter 1405 of this title unless the officer is considered and recommended for promotion to that grade by a promotion board convened under section 14101(a) of this title (or by a special selection board convened under section 14502 of this title).

"(d) DISCLOSURE OF BOARD RECOMMENDATIONS.—The recommendations of a promotion board may be disclosed only in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Defense. Those recommendations may not be disclosed to a person not a member of the board (or a member of the administrative staff designated by the Secretary concerned to assist the board) until the written report of the recommendations of the board, required by section 14109 of this title, is signed by each member of the board.

"(e) PROHIBITION OF COERCION AND UNAUTHORIZED INFLUENCE OF ACTIONS OF BOARD MEMBERS.—The Secretary convening a promotion board under section 14101(a) of this title, and an officer or other official exercising authority over any member of a selection board, may not—

"(1) censure, reprimand, or admonish the selection board or any member of the board with respect to the recommendations of the board or the exercise of any lawful function within the authorized discretion of the board; or

"(2) attempt to coerce or, by any unauthorized means, influence any action of a promotion board or any member of a promotion board in the formulation of the board's recommendations.

"§14109. Reports of promotion boards: in general

"(a) REPORT OF OFFICERS RECOMMENDED FOR PROMOTION.—Each promotion board convened under section 14101(a) of this title shall submit to the Secretary of the military department concerned a report in writing containing a list of the names of the officers recommended by the board for promotion. The report shall be signed by each member of the board.

"(b) CERTIFICATION.—Each report under subsection (a) shall include a certification—

"(1) that the board has carefully considered the record of each officer whose name was furnished to the board; and

"(2) that, in the case of a promotion board convened under section 14101(a) of this title, in the opinion of a majority of the members of the board, the officers recommended for promotion by the board are best qualified for promotion to meet the needs of the armed force concerned (as noted in the guidelines or information furnished the board under section 14107 of this title) among those officers whose names were furnished to the selection board.

"(c) SHOW-CAUSE RECOMMENDATIONS.—(1) A promotion board convened under section 14101(a) of this title shall include in its report to the Secretary concerned the name of any reserve officer before it for consideration for promotion whose record, in the opinion of a majority of the members of the board, indicates that the officer should be required to show cause for retention in an active status.

"(2) If such a report names an officer as having a record which indicates that the officer should be required to show cause for retention, the Secretary concerned may provide for the review of the record of that officer as provided under regulations prescribed under section 14902 of this title.

"§14110. Reports of promotion boards: review by Secretary

"(a) REVIEW OF REPORT.—Upon receipt of the report of a promotion board submitted under section 14109(a) of this title, the Secretary of the military department concerned shall review the report to determine whether the board has acted contrary to law or regulation or to guidelines furnished the board under section 14107(a) of this title. Following that review, unless the Secretary concerned makes a determination as described in subsection (b), the Secretary shall submit the report as required by section 14111 of this title.

"(b) RETURN OF REPORT FOR FURTHER PROCEEDINGS.—If, on the basis of a review of the report under subsection (a), the Secretary of the military department concerned determines that the board acted contrary to law or regulation or to guidelines furnished the board under section 14107(a) of this title, the Secretary shall return the report, together with a written explanation of the basis for such determination, to the board for further proceedings. Upon receipt of a report returned by the Secretary concerned under this subsection, the selection board (or a subsequent selection board convened under section 14101(a) of this title for the same grade and competitive category) shall conduct such proceedings as may be necessary in order to revise the report to be consistent with law, regulation, and such guidelines and shall resubmit the report, as revised, to the Secretary in accordance with section 14109 of this title.

"§14111. Reports of selection boards: transmittal to President

"(a) TRANSMITTAL TO PRESIDENT.—The Secretary concerned, after final review of the report of a selection board under section 14110 of this title, shall submit the report with the Secretary's recommendations, to the Secretary of Defense for transmittal by the Secretary to the President for approval or disapproval. If the authority of the President to approve or disapprove the report of a promotion board is delegated to the Secretary of Defense, that authority may not be redelegated except to an official in the Office of the Secretary of Defense.

"(b) REMOVAL OF NAME FROM BOARD REPORT.—The name of an officer recommended for promotion by a selection board may be removed from the report of the selection board only by the President.

"(c) RECOMMENDATIONS FOR REMOVAL OF SELECTED OFFICERS FROM REPORT.—If the Secretary of a military department or the Secretary of Defense makes a recommendation under this section that the name of an officer be removed from the report of a promotion board and the recommendation is accompanied by information that was not presented to that promotion board, that information shall be made available to that officer. The officer shall then be afforded a reasonable opportunity to submit comments on that information to the officials making the recommendation and the officials reviewing the recommendation. If an eligible officer cannot be given access to such information because of its classification status, the officer shall, to the maximum extent practicable, be provided with an appropriate summary of the information.

"§14112. Dissemination of names of officers selected

"Upon approval by the President of the report of a promotion board, the names of the officers recommended for promotion by the promotion board (other than any name removed by the President) may be disseminated to the armed force concerned. If those names have not been sooner disseminated, those names (other than the name of any officer whose promotion the Senate failed to confirm) shall be promptly disseminated to the armed force concerned upon confirmation by the Senate.

"(b) REQUIREMENT FOR CONSIDERATION OF ALL OFFICERS IN AND ABOVE THE ZONE.—Whenever a promotion board (other than a vacancy promotion board) is convened under section 14101(a) of this title for consideration of officers in a competitive category who are eligible under this chapter for consideration for promotion to the next higher grade, each officer in the promotion zone, and each officer above the promotion zone, for that grade and competitive category shall be considered for promotion.

"(c) PREVIOUSLY SELECTED OFFICERS NOT ELIGIBLE TO BE CONSIDERED.—A promotion board convened under section 14101(a) of this title may not consider for promotion to the next higher grade—

"(1) an officer whose name is on a promotion list for that grade as a result of recommendation for promotion to that grade by an earlier selection board convened under that section or section 14502 of this title or under chapter 36 of this title;

"(2) an officer who has been approved for Federal recognition by a board convened under section 307 of title 32 and nominated by the President for promotion to the next higher grade as a reserve of the Army or of the Air Force as the case may be; or

"(3) an officer who has been nominated by the President for promotion to the next higher grade under any other provision of law.

"(d) OFFICERS BELOW THE ZONE.—The Secretary of the military department concerned may, by regulation, prescribe procedures to limit the officers to be considered by a selection board from below the promotion zone to those officers who are determined to be exceptionally well qualified for promotion. The regulations shall include criteria for determining which officers below the promotion zone are exceptionally well qualified for promotion.

"(e) RESERVE OFFICERS OF THE ARMY; CONSIDERATION FOR BRIGADIER GENERAL AND MAJOR GENERAL.—In the case of officers of the Army, if the Secretary of the Army determines that vacancies are authorized or anticipated in the reserve grades of major general or brigadier general for officers who are on the reserve active-status list and who are not assigned to units organized to serve as a unit and the Secretary convenes a mandatory promotion board under section 14101(a) of this title to consider officers for promotion to fill such vacancies, the Secretary may limit the officers to be considered by that board to those determined to be exceptionally well qualified for promotion under such criteria and procedures as the Secretary may by regulation prescribe.

"(f) CERTAIN RESERVE OFFICERS OF THE AIR FORCE.—A reserve officer of the Air Force who (1) is in the Air National Guard of the United States and holds the grade of lieutenant colonel, colonel, or brigadier general, or (2) is in the Air Force Reserve and holds the grade of colonel or brigadier general, is not eligible for consideration for promotion by a mandatory promotion board convened under section 14101(a) of this title.

"(g) NONCONSIDERATION OF OFFICERS SCHEDULED FOR REMOVAL FROM RESERVE ACTIVE-STATUS LIST.—The Secretary of the military department concerned may, by regulation, provide for the exclusion from consideration for promotion by a promotion board of any officer otherwise eligible to be considered by the board who has an established date for removal from the reserve active-status list that is not more than 90 days after the date on which the selection board for which the officer would otherwise be eligible is to be convened.

"§14302. Promotion zones

"(a) PROMOTION ZONES GENERALLY.—For purposes of this chapter, a promotion zone is an eligibility category for the consideration of officers by a mandatory promotion board. A promotion zone consists of those officers on the reserve active-status list who are in the same grade and competitive category and who meet the requirements of both paragraphs (1) and (2) or the requirements of paragraph (3), as follows:

"(1)(A) In the case of officers in grades below colonel, for reserve officers of the Army, Air Force, and Marine Corps, or captain, for officers of the Naval Reserve, those who have neither (i) failed of selection for promotion to the next higher grade, nor (ii) been removed from a list of officers recommended for promotion to that grade.

"(B) In the case of officers in the grade of colonel or brigadier general, for reserve officers of the Army and Marine Corps, or in the grade of captain or rear admiral (lower half), for reserve officers of the Navy, those who have neither (i) been recommended for promotion to the next higher grade when considered in the promotion zone, nor (ii) been removed from a list of officers recommended for promotion to that grade.

"(2) Those officers who are senior to the officer designated by the Secretary of the military department concerned to be the junior officer in the promotion zone eligible for consideration for promotion to the next higher grade and the officer so designated.

"(3) Those officers who—

"(A) have been selected from below the zone for promotion to the next higher grade or by a vacancy promotion board, but whose names were removed from the list of officers recommended for promotion to that next higher grade resulting from that selection;

"(B) have not failed of selection for promotion to that next higher grade; and

"(C) are senior to the officer designated by the Secretary of the military department concerned to be the junior officer in the promotion zone eligible for consideration for promotion to that next higher grade and the officer so designated.

"(b) OFFICERS ABOVE THE ZONE.—Officers on the reserve active-status list are considered to be above the promotion zone for a grade and competitive category if they—

"(1) are eligible for consideration for promotion to the next higher grade;

"(2) are in the same grade as those officers in the promotion zone for that competitive category; and

"(3) are senior to the senior officer in the promotion zone for that competitive category.

"(c) OFFICERS BELOW THE ZONE.—Officers on the reserve active-status list are considered to be below the promotion zone for a grade and competitive category if they—

"(1) are eligible for consideration for promotion to the next higher grade;

"(2) are in the same grade as those officers in the promotion zone for that competitive category; and

"(3) are junior to the junior officer in the promotion zone for that competitive category.

"§14303. Eligibility for consideration for promotion: minimum years of service in grade

"(a) OFFICERS IN PAY GRADES O-1 AND O-2.—An officer who is on the reserve active-status list of the Army, Navy, Air Force, or Marine Corps and holds a permanent appointment in the grade of second lieutenant or first lieutenant as a reserve officer of the Army, Air Force, or Marine Corps, or in the grade of ensign or lieutenant (junior grade) as a reserve officer of the Navy, may not be promoted to the next higher grade, or granted Federal recognition in that grade, until the officer has completed the following years of service in grade:

"(1) Eighteen months, in the case of an officer holding a permanent appointment in the grade of second lieutenant or ensign.

"(2) Two years, in the case of an officer holding a permanent appointment in the grade of first lieutenant or lieutenant (junior grade).

"(b) OFFICERS IN PAY GRADES O-3 AND ABOVE.—Subject to subsection (d), an officer who is on the reserve active-status list of the Army, Air Force, or Marine Corps and holds a permanent appointment in a grade above first lieutenant, or who is on the reserve active-status list of the Navy in a grade above lieutenant (junior grade), may not be considered for selection for promotion to the next higher grade, or examined for Federal recognition in the next higher grade, until the officer has completed the following years of service in grade:

"(1) Three years, in the case of an officer of the Army, Air Force, or Marine Corps holding a permanent appointment in the grade of captain, major, or lieutenant colonel or in the case of a reserve officer of the Navy holding a permanent appointment in the grade of lieutenant, lieutenant commander, or commander.

"(2) One year, in the case of an officer of the Army, Air Force, or Marine Corps holding a permanent appointment in the grade of colonel or brigadier general or in the case of a reserve officer of the Navy holding a permanent appointment in the grade of captain or rear admiral (lower half).

This subsection does not apply to an adjutant general or assistant adjutant general of a State or to an appointment in a higher grade which is based upon a specific provision of law.

"(c) AUTHORITY TO LENGTHEN MINIMUM PERIOD IN GRADE.—The Secretary concerned may prescribe a period of service in grade for eligibility for promotion, in the case of officers to whom subsection (a) applies, or for eligibility for consideration for promotion, in the case of officers to whom subsection (b) applies, that is longer than the applicable period specified in that subsection.

"(d) WAIVERS TO ENSURE TWO BELOW-THE-ZONE CONSIDERATIONS.—Subject to section 14307(b) of this title, the Secretary of the military department concerned may waive subsection (b) to the extent necessary to ensure that officers described in paragraph (1) of that subsection have at least two opportunities for consideration for promotion to the next higher grade as officers below the promotion zone.

"§14304. Eligibility for consideration for promotion: maximum years of service in grade

"(a) CONSIDERATION FOR PROMOTION WITHIN SPECIFIED TIMES.—(1) Officers described in paragraph (3) shall be placed in the promotion zone for that officer's grade and competitive category, and shall be considered for promotion to the next higher grade by a promotion board convened under section 14101(a) of this title, far enough in advance of completing the years of service in grade specified in the following table so that, if the officer is recommended for promotion, the promotion may be effective on or before the date on which the officer will complete those years of service.

"Current Grade	Maximum years of service in grade
"First lieutenant or Lieutenant (junior grade)	5 years
"Captain or Navy Lieutenant	7 years
"Major or Lieutenant commander	7 years

"(2) Paragraph (1) is subject to subsections (a), (b), and (c) of section 14301 of this title and applies without regard to vacancies.

"(3) Paragraph (1) applies to an officer who is on the reserve active-status list of the Army, Navy, Air Force, or Marine Corps and who holds a permanent appointment in the grade of first lieutenant, captain, or major as a reserve of the Army, Air Force, or Marine Corps, or to an officer on the reserve active-status list of the Navy in the grade of lieutenant (junior grade), lieutenant, or lieutenant commander as a reserve of the Navy, and who, while holding that appointment, has not been considered by a selection board convened under section 14101(a) or 14502 of this title for promotion to the next higher grade.

"(b) PROMOTION DATE.—An officer holding a permanent grade specified in the table in subsection (a) who is recommended for promotion to the next higher grade by a selection board the first time the officer is considered for promotion while in or above the promotion zone and who is placed on an approved promotion list established under section 14308(a) of this title shall (if not promoted sooner or removed from that list by the President or by reason of declination) be promoted, without regard to the existence of a vacancy, on the date on which the officer completes the maximum years of service in grade specified in subsection (a). The preceding sentence is subject to the limitations of section 12011 of this title.

"(c) WAIVER AUTHORITY FOR NAVY AND MARINE CORPS RUNNING MATE SYSTEM.—If the Secretary of the Navy establishes promotion zones for officers on the reserve active-status list of the Navy or the Marine Corps Reserve in accordance with a running mate system under section 14306 of this title, the Secretary may waive the requirements of subsection (a) to the extent the Secretary considers necessary in any case in which the years of service for promotion, or for consideration for promotion, within those zones will exceed the maximum years of service in grade specified in subsection (a).

"§14305. Establishment of promotion zones: mandatory consideration for promotion

"(a) ESTABLISHMENT OF ZONE.—Before convening a mandatory promotion board under section 14101(a) of this title, the Secretary of the military department concerned shall establish a promotion zone for officers serving in each grade and competitive category to be considered by the board.

"(b) NUMBER IN THE ZONE.—The Secretary concerned shall determine the number of officers in the promotion zone for officers serving in any grade and competitive category from among officers who are eligible for promotion in that grade and competitive category under the provisions of sections 14303 and 14304 of this title and who are otherwise eligible for promotion.

"(c) FACTORS IN DETERMINING NUMBER IN THE ZONE.—The Secretary's determination under subsection (b) shall be made on the basis of an estimate of the following:

"(1) The number of officers needed in that competitive category in the next higher grade in each of the next five years.

"(2) In the case of a promotion zone for officers to be promoted to a grade to which the maximum years of in grade criteria established in section 14304 of this title apply, the number of officers in that competitive category who are required to be considered for selection for promotion to the next higher grade under that section.

"(3) The number of officers that should be placed in the promotion zone in each of the next five years to provide to officers in those years relatively similar opportunities for promotion.

"§14306. Establishment of promotion zones: Naval Reserve and Marine Corps Reserve running mate system

"(a) AUTHORITY OF SECRETARY OF THE NAVY.—The Secretary of the Navy may by regulation implement section 14305 of this title by requiring that the promotion zone for consideration of officers on the reserve active-status list of the Navy or the Marine Corps for promotion to the next higher grade be determined in accordance with a running mate system as provided in subsection (b).

"(b) ASSIGNMENT OF RUNNING MATES.—An officer to whom a running mate system applies shall be assigned as a running mate an officer of the same grade on the active-duty list of the same armed force. The officer on the reserve active-status list is in the promotion zone and is eligible for consideration for promotion to the next higher grade by a selection board convened under section 14101(a) of this title when that officer's running mate is in or above the promotion zone established for that officer's grade under chapter 36 of this title.

"(c) CONSIDERATION OF OFFICERS BELOW THE ZONE UNDER A RUNNING MATE SYSTEM.—If the Secretary of the Navy authorizes the selection of officers for promotion from below the promotion zone in accordance with section 14307 of this title, the number of officers to be considered from below the zone may be established through the application of the running mate system or otherwise as the Secretary determines to be appropriate to meet the needs of the Navy or Marine Corps.

"§14307. Number of officers to be recommended for promotion

"(a) DETERMINATION OF MAXIMUM NUMBER.—Before convening a promotion board under section 14101(a) of this title for a grade and competitive category (other than a vacancy promotion board), the Secretary of the military department concerned, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Defense, shall determine the maximum number of officers in that grade and competitive category that the board may recommend for promotion. The Secretary shall make the determination under the preceding sentence of the maximum number that may be recommended with a view to having on the reserve active-status list a sufficient number of officers in each grade and competitive category to meet the needs of the armed force concerned for officers on that list. In order to make that determination, the Secretary shall determine (1) the number of positions needed to accomplish mission objectives which require officers of such competitive category in the grade to which the board will recommend officers for promotion, (2) the estimated number of officers needed to fill vacancies in such positions during the period in which it is anticipated that officers selected for promotion will be promoted, (3) the number of officers authorized by the Secretary of the military department concerned to serve on the reserve active-status list in the grade and competitive category under consideration, and (4) any statutory limitation on the number of officers in any grade or category (or combination thereof) authorized to be on the reserve active-status list.

"(b) BELOW-THE-ZONE SELECTIONS.—(1) The Secretary of the military department concerned may, when the needs of the armed force concerned require, authorize the consideration of officers in the grade of captain, major, or lieutenant colonel on the reserve active-status list of the Army or Air Force, in a grade above first lieutenant on the reserve active-status list of the Marine Corps, or in a grade above lieutenant (junior grade) on the reserve active-status list of the Navy, for promotion to the next higher grade from below the promotion zone.

"(2) When selection from below the promotion zone is authorized, the Secretary shall establish the number of officers that may be recommended for promotion from below the promotion zone in each competitive category to be considered. That number may not exceed the number equal to 10 percent of the maximum number of officers that the board is authorized to recommend for promotion in such competitive category, except that the Secretary of Defense may authorize a greater number, not to exceed 15 percent of the total number of officers that the board is authorized to recommend for promotion, if the Secretary of Defense determines that the needs of the armed force concerned so require. If the maximum number determined under this paragraph is less than one, the board may recommend one officer for promotion from below the promotion zone.

"(3) The number of officers recommended for promotion from below the promotion zone does not increase the maximum number of officers that the board is authorized to recommend for promotion under subsection (a).

"§14308. Promotions: how made

"(a) PROMOTION LIST.—When the report of a selection board convened under section 14101(a) or 14502 of this title is approved by the President, the Secretary of the military department concerned shall place the names of all officers selected for promotion within a competitive category on a single list for that competitive category, to be known as a promotion list, in the order of seniority of those officers on the reserve active-status list.

"(b) PROMOTION; HOW MADE; ORDER.—(1) Officers on a promotion list for a competitive category shall be promoted in the manner specified in section 12203 of this title.

"(2) Officers on a promotion list for a competitive category shall be promoted to the next higher grade in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the military department concerned. Except as provided in section 14311, 14312, or 14502(e) of this title or in subsection (d) or (e), promotions shall be made in the order in which the names of officers appear on the promotion list and after officers previously selected for promotion in that competitive category have been promoted.

"(3) Officers to be promoted to the grade of first lieutenant or lieutenant (junior grade) shall be promoted in accordance with regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the military department concerned.

"(c) DATE OF RANK.—(1) The date of rank of an officer appointed to a higher grade under this section is determined under section 741(d)(2) of this title.

"(2) Except as specifically authorized by law, a reserve officer is not entitled to additional pay or allowances if the effective date of the officer's promotion is adjusted to reflect a date earlier than the actual date of the officer's promotion.

"(d) OFFICERS WITH RUNNING MATES.—An officer to whom a running mate system applies under section 14306 of this title and who is selected for promotion is eligible for promotion to the grade for which selected when the officer who is that officer's running mate becomes eligible for promotion under chapter 36 of this title. The effective date of the promotion of that officer shall be the same as that of the officer's running mate in the grade to which the running mate is promoted.

"(e) ARMY RESERVE AND AIR FORCE RESERVE PROMOTIONS TO FILL VACANCIES.—Subject to this section and to section 14311(e) of this title, and under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the military department concerned—

"(1) an officer in the Army Reserve or the Air Force Reserve who is on a promotion list as a result of selection for promotion by a mandatory promotion board convened under section 14101(a) of this title or a board convened under section 14502 or chapter 36 of this title may be promoted at any time to fill a vacancy in a position to which the officer is assigned; and

"(2) an officer in the Army Reserve or the Air Force Reserve who is on a promotion list as a result of selection for promotion by a vacancy promotion board convened under section 14101(a) of this title may be promoted at any time to fill the vacancy for which the officer was selected.

"(f) EFFECTIVE DATE OF PROMOTION AFTER FEDERAL RECOGNITION.—The effective date of a promotion of a reserve commissioned officer of the Army or the Air Force who is extended Federal recognition in the next higher grade in the Army National Guard or the Air National Guard under section 307 or 310 of title 32 shall be the date on which such Federal recognition in that grade is so extended.

"(g) ARMY AND AIR FORCE GENERAL OFFICER PROMOTIONS.—A reserve officer of the Army who is on a promotion list for promotion to the grade of brigadier general or major general as a result of selection by a vacancy promotion board may be promoted to that grade only to fill a vacancy in that grade in a unit of the Army Reserve that is organized to serve as a unit and that has attained the strength prescribed by the Secretary of the Army. A reserve officer of the Air Force who is on a promotion list for promotion to the grade of brigadier general or major general as a result of selection by a vacancy promotion board may be promoted to that grade only to fill a vacancy in the Air Force Reserve in that grade.

"§14309. Acceptance of promotion; oath of office

"(a) ACCEPTANCE.—An officer who is appointed to a higher grade under this chapter shall be considered to have accepted the appointment on the date on which the appointment is made unless the officer expressly declines the appointment or is granted a delay of promotion under section 14312 of this title.

"(b) OATH.—An officer who has served continuously since taking the oath of office prescribed in section 3331 of title 5 is not required to take a new oath upon appointment to a higher grade under this chapter.

"§14310. Removal of officers from a list of officers recommended for promotion

"(a) REMOVAL BY PRESIDENT.—The President may remove the name of any officer from a promotion list at any time before the date on which the officer is promoted.

"(b) REMOVAL FOR WITHHOLDING OF SENATE ADVICE AND CONSENT.—If the Senate does not give its advice and consent to the appointment to the next higher grade of an officer whose name is on a list of officers approved by the President for promotion (except in the case of promotions to a reserve grade to which appointments may be made by the President alone), the name of that officer shall be removed from the list.

"(c) CONTINUED ELIGIBILITY FOR PROMOTION.—An officer whose name is removed from a list under subsection (a) or (b) continues to be eligible for consideration for promotion. If that officer is recommended for promotion by the next selection board convened for that officer's grade and competitive category and the officer is promoted, the Secretary of the military department concerned may, upon the promotion, grant the officer the same date of rank, the same effective date for the pay and allowances of the grade to which promoted, and the same position on the reserve active-status list, as the officer would have had if the officer's name had not been removed from the list.

"§14311. Delay of promotion: involuntary

"(a) DELAY DURING INVESTIGATIONS AND PROCEEDINGS.—(1) Under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the military department concerned, the appointment of an officer to a higher grade may be delayed if any of the following applies before the date on which the appointment would otherwise be made:

"(A) Sworn charges against the officer have been received by an officer exercising general court-martial jurisdiction over the officer and the charges have not been disposed of.

"(B) An investigation is being conducted to determine whether disciplinary action of any kind should be brought against the officer.

"(C) A board of officers has been convened under section 14903 of this title to review the record of the officer.

"(D) A criminal proceeding in a Federal or State court of competent jurisdiction is pending against the officer.

"(2) If disciplinary action is not taken against the officer, if the charges against the officer are withdrawn or dismissed, if the officer is not separated by the Secretary of the military department concerned as the result of having been required to show cause for retention, or if the officer is acquitted of the charges, as the case may be, then (unless action to delay the officer's appointment to the higher grade has been taken under subsection (b)) the officer shall be retained on the promotion list, list of officers found qualified for Federal recognition, or list of officers nominated by the President to the Senate for appointment in a higher reserve grade and shall, upon promotion to the next higher grade, have the same date of rank, the same effective date for the pay and allowances of the grade to which promoted, and the same position on the reserve active-status list as the officer would have had if no delay had intervened, unless the Secretary concerned determines that the officer was unqualified for promotion for any part of the delay. If the Secretary makes such a determination, the Secretary may adjust such date of rank, effective date of pay and allowances, and position on the reserve active-status list as the Secretary considers appropriate under the circumstances.

"(b) DELAY FOR LACK OF QUALIFICATIONS.—Under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of the military department concerned, the appointment of an officer to a higher grade may also be delayed if there is cause to believe that the officer is mentally, physically, morally, or professionally unqualified to perform the duties of the grade to which selected. If the Secretary concerned later determines that the officer is qualified for promotion to the higher grade, the officer shall be retained on the promotion list, the list of officers found qualified for Federal recognition, or list of officers nominated by the President to the Senate for appointment in a higher reserve grade, and shall, upon promotion to that grade, have the same date of rank, the same effective date for pay and allowances of that grade, and the same position on the reserve active-status list as the officer would have had if no delay had intervened, unless the Secretary concerned determines that the officer was unqualified for promotion for any part of the delay. If the Secretary makes such a determination, the Secretary may adjust such date of rank, effective date of pay and allowances, and position on the reserve active-status list as the Secretary considers appropriate under the circumstances.

"(c) NOTICE TO OFFICER.—(1) The appointment of an officer to a higher grade may not be delayed under subsection (a) or (b) unless the officer is given written notice of the grounds for the delay. The preceding sentence does not apply if it is impracticable to give the officer written notice before the date on which the appointment to the higher grade would otherwise take effect, but in such a case the written notice shall be given as soon as practicable.

"(2) An officer whose promotion is delayed under subsection (a) or (b) shall be given an opportunity to make a written statement to the Secretary of the military department concerned in response to the action taken. The Secretary shall give consideration to any such statement.

"(d) MAXIMUM LENGTH OF DELAY IN PROMOTION.—The appointment of an officer to a higher grade may not be delayed under subsection (a) or (b) for more than six months after the date on which the officer would otherwise have been promoted unless the Secretary concerned specifies a further period of delay. An officer's appointment may not be delayed more than 90 days after final action has been taken in any criminal case against the officer in a Federal or State court of competent jurisdiction or more than 90 days after final action has been taken in any court-martial case against the officer. Except for court action, a promotion may not be delayed more than 18 months after the date on which the officer would otherwise have been promoted.

"(e) DELAY BECAUSE OF LIMITATIONS ON OFFICER STRENGTH IN GRADE OR DUTIES TO WHICH ASSIGNED.—(1) Under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Defense, the promotion of a reserve officer on the reserve active-status list who is serving on active duty, or who is on full-time National Guard duty for administration of the reserves or the National Guard, to a grade to which the strength limitations of section 12011 of this title apply shall be delayed if necessary to ensure compliance with those strength limitations. The delay shall expire when the Secretary determines that the delay is no longer required to ensure such compliance.

"(2) The promotion of an officer described in paragraph (1) shall also be delayed while the officer is on duty described in that paragraph unless the Secretary of the military department concerned, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Defense, determines that the duty assignment of the officer requires a higher grade than the grade currently held by the officer.

"(3) The date of rank and position on the reserve active-status list of a reserve officer whose promotion to or Federal recognition in the next higher grade was delayed under paragraph (1) or (2) solely as the result of the limitations imposed under the regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Defense or contained in section 12011 of this title shall be the date on which the officer would have been promoted to or recognized in the higher grade had such limitations not existed.

"(4) If an officer whose promotion is delayed under paragraph (1) or (2) completes the period of active duty or full-time National Guard duty that the officer is required by law or regulation to perform as a member of a reserve component, the officer may request release from active duty or full-time National Guard duty. If the request is granted, the officer's promotion shall be effective upon the officer's release from such duty. The date of rank and position on the reserve active-status list of the officer shall be the date the officer would have been promoted to or recognized in the higher grade had the limitations imposed under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Defense contained in section 12011 of this title not existed. If an officer whose promotion is delayed under paragraph (1) or (2) has not completed the period of active duty or full-time National Guard duty that the officer is required by law or regulation to perform as a member of a reserve component, the officer may be retained on active duty or on full-time National Guard duty in the grade in which the officer was serving before the officer's being found qualified for Federal recognition or the officer's selection for the promotion until the officer completes that required period of duty.

"§14312. Delay of promotion: voluntary

"(a) AUTHORITY FOR VOLUNTARY DELAYS.—(1) The Secretary of the military department concerned may, by regulation, permit delays of a promotion of an officer who is recommended for promotion by a mandatory selection board convened under section 14101(a) or a special selection board convened under section 14502 of this title at the request of the officer concerned. Such delays, in the case of any promotion, may extend for any period not to exceed three years from the date on which the officer would otherwise be promoted.

"(2) Regulations under this section shall provide that—

"(A) a request for such a delay of promotion must be submitted by the officer concerned before the delay may be approved; and

"(B) denial of such a request shall not be considered to be a failure of selection for promotion unless the officer declines to accept a promotion under circumstances set forth in subsection (c).

"(b) EFFECT OF APPROVAL OF REQUEST.—If a request for delay of a promotion under subsection (a) is approved, the officer's name shall remain on the promotion list during the authorized period of delay (unless removed under any other provision of law). Upon the end of the period of the authorized delay, or at any time during such period, the officer may accept the promotion, which shall be effective on the date of acceptance. Such an acceptance of a promotion shall be made in accordance with regulations prescribed under this section.

"(c) EFFECT OF DECLINING A PROMOTION.—An officer's name shall be removed from the promotion list and, if the officer is serving in a grade below colonel or, in the case of the Navy, captain, the officer shall be considered to have failed of selection for promotion if any of the following applies:

"(1) The Secretary concerned has not authorized voluntary delays of promotion under subsection (a) to the grade concerned and the officer declines to accept an appointment to a higher grade.

"(2) The Secretary concerned has authorized voluntary delays of promotion under subsection (a), but has denied the request of the officer for a delay of promotion and the officer then declines to accept an appointment to a higher grade.

"(3) The Secretary concerned has approved the request of an officer for a delay of promotion and, upon the end of the period of delay authorized in accordance with regulations prescribed under subsection (a), the officer then declines to accept an appointment to a higher grade.

"§14313. Authority to vacate promotions to grade of brigadier general or rear admiral (lower half)

"(a) AUTHORITY.—The President may vacate the appointment of a reserve officer to the grade of brigadier general or rear admiral (lower half) if the period of time during which the officer has served in that grade after promotion to that grade is less than 18 months.

"(b) EFFECT OF PROMOTION BEING VACATED.—Except as provided in subsection (c), an officer whose promotion to the grade of brigadier general is vacated under this section holds the grade of colonel as a reserve of the armed force of which the officer is a member. An officer whose promotion to the grade of rear admiral (lower half) is vacated under this section holds the grade of captain in the Naval Reserve. Upon assuming the lower grade, the officer shall have the same position on the reserve active-status list as the officer would have had if the officer had not served in the higher grade.

"(c) SPECIAL RULE FOR OFFICERS SERVING AS ADJUTANT GENERAL.—In the case of an officer serving as an adjutant general or assistant adjutant general whose promotion to the grade of brigadier general is vacated under this section, the officer then holds the reserve grade held by that officer immediately before the officer's appointment as adjutant general or assistant adjutant general.

"§14314. Army and Air Force commissioned officers: generals ceasing to occupy positions commensurate with grade; State adjutants general

"(a) GENERAL OFFICERS.—Within 30 days after a reserve officer of the Army or the Air Force on the reserve active-status list in a general officer grade ceases to occupy a position commensurate with that grade (or commensurate with a higher grade), the Secretary concerned shall transfer or discharge the officer in accordance with whichever of the following the officer elects:

"(1) Transfer the officer in grade to the Retired Reserve, if the officer is qualified and applies for the transfer.

"(2) Transfer the officer in grade to the inactive status list of the Standby Reserve, if the officer is qualified.

"(3) Discharge the officer from the officer's reserve appointment and, if the officer is qualified and applies therefor, appoint the officer in the reserve grade held by the officer as a reserve officer before the officer's appointment in a general officer grade.

"(4) Discharge the officer from the officer's reserve appointment.

"(b) ADJUTANTS GENERAL.—If a reserve officer who is federally recognized in the Army National Guard or the Air National Guard solely because of the officer's appointment as adjutant general or assistant adjutant general of a State ceases to occupy that position, the Secretary concerned, not later than 30 days after the date on which the officer ceases to occupy that position, shall—

"(1) withdraw that officer's Federal recognition; and

"(2) require that the officer—

"(A) be transferred in grade to the Retired Reserve, if the officer is qualified and applies for the transfer;

"(B) be discharged from the officer's reserve appointment and appointed in the reserve grade held by the officer as a reserve officer of the Air Force immediately before the appointment of that officer as adjutant general or assistant adjutant general, if the officer is qualified and applies for that appointment; or

"(C) be discharged from the officer's reserve appointment.

Any such board shall be convened under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Defense and shall be appointed and composed in accordance with section 14102 of this title and shall include the representation of competitive categories required by that section. The members of a board convened under this subsection shall be required to take an oath in the same manner as prescribed in section 14103 of this title.

"(2) A special selection board convened under this subsection shall consider the record of the officer or former officer as that record would have appeared to the promotion board that should have considered the officer or former officer. That record shall be compared with a sampling of the records of those officers of the same grade and competitive category who were recommended for promotion and those officers of the same grade and competitive category who were not recommended for promotion by that board.

"(3) If a special selection board convened under paragraph (1) does not recommend for promotion an officer or former officer in a grade below the grade of colonel or, in the case of an officer or former officer of the Navy, captain, whose name was referred to it for consideration, the officer or former officer shall be considered to have failed of selection for promotion.

"(b) Officers Considered But Not Selected; Material Error.—(1) In the case of an officer or former officer who was eligible for promotion and was considered for selection for promotion from in or above the promotion zone under this chapter by a selection board but was not selected, the Secretary of the military department concerned may, under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Defense, convene a special selection board under this subsection to determine whether the officer or former officer should be recommended for promotion, if the Secretary determines that—

"(B) the selection board did not have before it for its consideration material information.

"(2) A special selection board convened under paragraph (1) shall be appointed and composed in accordance with section 14102 of this title (including the representation of competitive categories required by that section), and the members of such a board shall take an oath in the same manner as prescribed in section 14103 of this title.

"(e) Appointment of Officers Recommended for Promotion.—(1) An officer whose name is placed on a promotion list as a result of recommendation for promotion by a special selection board convened under this section, shall, as soon as practicable, be appointed to the next higher grade in accordance with the law and policies which would have been applicable had he been recommended for promotion by the board which should have considered or which did consider him.

"(2) An officer who is promoted to the next higher grade as the result of the recommendation of a special selection board convened under this section shall, upon such promotion, have the same date of rank, the same effective date for the pay and allowances of that grade, and the same position on the reserve active-status list as the officer would have had if the officer had been recommended for promotion to that grade by the selection board which should have considered, or which did consider, the officer.

"(3) If the report of a special selection board convened under this section, as approved by the President, recommends for promotion to the next higher grade an officer not currently eligible for promotion or a former officer whose name was referred to it for consideration, the Secretary concerned may act under section 1552 of this title to correct the military record of the officer or former officer to correct an error or remove an injustice resulting from not being selected for promotion by the board which should have considered, or which did consider, the officer.

"(f) Time Limits for Consideration.—The Secretary of Defense may prescribe by regulation the circumstances under which consideration by a special selection board is contingent upon application for consideration by an officer

If a court finds the determination to be arbitrary or capricious, not based on substantial evidence, or otherwise contrary to law, it shall remand the case to the Secretary concerned, who shall provide for consideration of the officer or former officer by a special selection board under this section.

"(2) If a court finds that the action of a special selection board which considers an officer or former officer was contrary to law or involved material error of fact or material administrative error, it shall remand the case to the Secretary concerned, who shall provide the officer or former officer reconsideration by a new special selection board.

"(i) DESIGNATION OF BOARDS.—The Secretary of the military department concerned may designate a promotion board convened under section 14101(a) of this title as a special selection board convened under this section. A board so designated may function in both capacities.

"(C) Additional credit of (i) not more than one year for internship or equivalent graduate medical, dental, or other formal health professional training required by the armed forces, and (ii) not more than one year for each additional year of such graduate-level training or experience creditable toward certification in a speciality required by the armed force concerned.

"(D) Additional credit, in unusual cases, based on special experience in a particular field.

"(E) Additional credit for experience as a physician or dentist, if appointed, assigned, or designated as a medical or dental officer.

"(2) If the Secretary of Defense determines that the number of medical or dental officers serving in an active status in a reserve component of the Army, Navy, or Air Force in grades below major or lieutenant commander is critically below the number needed by such reserve component in such grades, the Secretary of Defense may authorize the Secretary of the military department concerned to credit any person who is receiving an original appointment for service as a medical or dental officer with a period of constructive credit in such amount (in addition to any amount credited such person under subsection (b)) as will result in the grade of such person being that of captain or, in the case of the Naval Reserve, lieutenant.

"(3) Except as authorized by the Secretary concerned in individual cases and under regulations prescribed by the Secretary of Defense in the case of a medical or dental officer, the amount of constructive service credited an officer under this subsection may not exceed the amount required in order for the officer to be eligible for an original appointment as a reserve officer of the Army, Air Force, or Marine Corps in the grade of major or as a reserve officer of the Navy in the grade of lieutenant commander.

However, in the case of an officer who completes advanced education or receives an advanced degree while on active duty or in an active status and in less than the number of years normally required to complete such advanced education or receive such advanced degree, constructive service may, subject to regulations prescribed under subsection (a)(2), be credited to the officer under subsection (b)(1)(A) to the extent that the number of years normally required to complete such advanced education or receive such advanced degree exceeds the actual number of years in which such advanced education or degree is obtained by the officer.

"(d) If the Secretary of Defense determines that the number of qualified judge advocates serving on the active-duty list of the Army, Navy, Air Force, or Marine Corps in grades below lieutenant commander or major is critically below the number needed by that armed force in those grades, the Secretary of Defense may authorize the Secretary of the military department concerned to credit any person who is receiving an original appointment with a view to assignment to the Judge Advocate General's Corps of the Army or appointment to the Judge Advocate General's Corps of the Navy, or who is receiving an original appointment in the Air Force or Marine Corps with a view to designation as a judge advocate, with a period of constructive service in such an amount (in addition to any amount credited such person under subsection (b)) as will result in the grade of such person being that of captain or, in the case of the Navy, lieutenant, and the date of rank of such person being junior to that of all other officers of the same grade serving on the active-duty list.

"(e) Constructive service credited an officer under subsection (b) or (d) shall be used only for determining the officer's—

The differences between the Senate bill, the House amendment, and the substitute agreed to in conference are noted below, except for clerical corrections, conforming changes made necessary by agreements reached by the conferees, and minor drafting and clarifying changes.

SUMMARY STATEMENT OF CONFERENCE ACTION

The conferees recommend authorizations for the Department of Defense for procurement, research and development, test and evaluation, operation and maintenance, working capital funds, military construction and family housing, weapons programs of the Department of Energy, and civil defense that have a budget authority implication of $263.8 billion.

SUMMARY TABLE OF AUTHORIZATIONS

The defense authorization act provides authorizations for appropriations but does not generally provide budget authority. Budget authority is generally provided in appropriation acts.

In order to relate the conference recommendations to the Budget Resolution, matters in addition to the dollar authorizations contained in this bill must be taken into account. A number of programs in the defense function are authorized permanently or, in certain instances, authorized in other annual legislation. In addition, this authorization bill would establish personnel levels and include a number of legislative provisions affecting military compensation.

The following table summarizes authorizations included in the bill for fiscal year 1995 and, in addition, summarizes the implication of the conference action for the budget totals for national defense (budget function 050).

The Senate recedes.

Congressional defense committees

The term "congressional defense committees" is often used in this statement of the managers. It means the Committees on Armed Services and the Committees on Appropriations of the Senate and House of Representatives.

DIVISION A—DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE AUTHORIZATIONS

TITLE I—PROCUREMENT

Overview

The budget request for fiscal year 1995 contained an authorization of $43,584.2 million for procurement in the Department of Defense. The Senate bill would authorize $43,797.0 million. The House amendment would authorize $44,631.3 million. The conferees recommend authorization of $43,527.9 million. Unless noted explicitly in the statement of managers, all changes are made without prejudice.

Submission of congressionally directed reports

As defense resources have declined, congressional emphasis on carefully prioritizing defense programs has properly increased. As a consequence, relatively smaller programs have required more thorough review. In developing the National Defense Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1994 (Public Law 103–160), the conferees identified several Navy procurement and development programs in the statement of the managers (H. Rept. 103–357) that merited stronger review within the Department. A partial list of these programs includes antisubmarine warfare (ASW) targets, torpedo support equipment, attack submarine (SSN) acoustics, domestic forging and manufacture of ship propellers, ship self-defense, towed array sonars, and the ship main propulsion gas turbine improvement program. The conferees highlighted these issues for a variety of reasons, including:

(1) major changes in force structure that may not have been reflected in acquisition priorities;

(2) uneven protection of the industrial base in critical areas; and

(3) professed warfighting emphasis shifts to littoral operations that did not appear to reflect the post-Cold War defense environment.

The conferees believed that the Department failed to justify adequately many of these programs in the budget justification material and the budget review process. In a general effort to address these concerns prudently, the conferees avoided taking precipitous action and reducing budgeted resources in fiscal year 1994 for such programs.

Instead, the conferees directed the Department to prepare a number of reports. The conferees intended that these reports would provide the Navy an opportunity to specify, in detail, how the Navy was adapting these programs to accommodate a new strategic and budget reality. The conferees intended to review these reports during consideration of the fiscal year 1995 defense authorization request.

The conferees also reminded the Navy informally of a reporting requirement on combat logistic force plans. The report, which was originally required in July 1992 in the Senate report on S. 3114 (S. Rept. 102–352), was due in February 1993.

When the Armed Services Committees of the Senate and House of Representatives began their mark-ups of this act, the Navy had delivered none of the reports listed above. To date, the Navy has now submitted only three. Of the three, the conferees believe that only one, the report on SSN acoustics, is reasonably comprehensive and begins to address the concerns that triggered congressional interest in the first place. Even this report did not deal with a principal part of the report requirement—distinguishing between future upgrades appropriate for a littoral environment and those associated with traditional open ocean ASW. Nor did it clarify their cost implications, information that was explicitly requested in the bill.

The conferees: (1) lack some required reports; (2) have been unable to verify the resource allocation priorities made in the Navy budget; (3) have dealt with budget justification that did not clarify such anomalies as inordinate cost growth from prior years; and (4) have seen unenlightening Defense Department appeals that rely more on rhetoric and assertions than analysis. The consequences are relatively predictable. The conferees have reallocated resources from some of these programs to others with higher priority. The Navy, and the rest of the Defense Department, should not be surprised when the Department delivers reports that are deficient, late, or both, and Congress takes action that the Department would not prefer.

AIRCRAFT PROCUREMENT, ARMY

Overview

The budget request for fiscal year 1995 contained an authorization of $1,041.6 million for Aircraft Procurement, Army. The Senate bill would authorize $1,073.8 million. The House amendment would authorize $1,301.5 million. The conferees recommend authorization of $1,289.5 million, as delineated in the following table. Unless noted explicitly in the statement of managers, all changes are made without prejudice.

TOW missile

The budget request contained $27.8 million in procurement for the TOW antitank missile. These funds were requested for plant closure and production support.

The Senate bill directed the Army to use the requested funds to continue missile production.

The House amendment took no similar action.

The House recedes.

The conferees direct the Secretary of the Army to include in the report required by the Senate report (S. Rept. 103-282) a reevaluation of TOW inventory requirements in light of the age and condition of the current TOW inventory, Javelin fielding, force structure reductions, and retirement of most of the Cobra attack helicopters. In addition, the conferees direct the Secretary to evaluate all reasonable alternatives for the Tow missile, including a hypervelocity missile, keeping in minds that any TOW replacement should not require extensive modifications of TOW launchers on the Army's Bradley fighting vehicles.

WEAPONS AND TRACKED COMBAT VEHICLES, ARMY

Overview

The budget request for fiscal year 1995 contained an authorization of $919.8 million for Weapons and Tracked Combat Vehicles, Army. The Senate bill would authorize $1,132.9 million. The House amendment would authorize $942.9 million. The conferees recommend authorization of $1,159.2 million, as delineated in the following table. Unless noted explicitly in the statement of managers, all changes are made without prejudice.

Bradley fighting vehicle system series modifications

The budget request included $72.5 million for Bradley fighting vehicle system (BFVS) series modifications.

The Senate bill and the House amendment would authorize the requested amount.

The Senate bill would authorize $7.6 million in another program element to procure one mechanized infantry battalion set of reactive armor tiles.

The conferees agree that this initiative should be funded in the Bradley modifications program element.

M109A6 howitzer improvement program

The budget request included $237.6 million for procurement of improved M109A6 howitzers.

The Senate bill would authorize the requested amount.

The House amendment would reduce the requested amount by $78.1 million.

The conferees agree to authorize $217.6 million, a reduction of $20.0 million to the requested amount.

Joint Army/industry plan for tank engines

The Senate bill included funds to preserve the tank engine industrial base and directed that some tank engine overhaul work be transferred from the Anniston Army Depot (AAD) to the contractor-operated Stratford Army Engine Plant (SAEP).

The House amendment contained no similar funding.

The conferees agree with the Defense Science Board recommendation that a U.S. tank industrial base should be preserved. The conferees believe that the SAEP, which currently manufactures engines for the Abrams M1 tank, and the Anniston Army Depot, which currently overhauls tank engines, could benefit from the preservation of this industry. Accordingly, the conferees agree to authorize $35.0 million for fiscal year 1995, of which:

(1) $9.0 million is for systems technical and engineering support and engine durability upgrade efforts;

(2) $6.0 million is for plant downsizing; and

(3) $20.0 million is for an extended service program for Abrams tank engines.

In addition, the conferees authorize the requested amounts for tank spares and repair parts and for depot activities at AAD. Finally, the conferees direct the obligation of the remaining $17.0 million authorized and appropriated in fiscal year 1994, and direct the Army to develop a depot/industry tank propulsion plan to be conducted jointly between AAD and SAEP that will preserve the tank engine base. The conferees direct the transfer of all outputs of the extended service program an its successor programs from the SAEP to AAD.

Tank gun mounts

The conferees note that the discussion in the Senate report (S. Rept. 103-282) concerning gun mounts is not necessarily the position of the conference.

V-903 diesel engines

The budget request and the Senate bill did not include funds for spares and repair parts for tracked combat vehicles.

The House amendment would authorize an additional $10.2 million for 294 V-903 diesel engines.

The conferees are aware that the contractor claims it cannot produce V-903 diesel engines when the production rate falls below about 730 engines per year and, therefore, intends to discontinue production on May 19, 1995. The V-903 diesel engine is used in the Bradley fighting vehicle, multiple launch rocket system, M9 armored combat earthmover, new command and control vehicle, new electronic fighting vehicle, and Marine Corps AAVP7A1. The Army states that it requires a substantial number of additional engines, but has not decided whether to continue to fund engine procurement at the rates the contractor claims are necessary.

The conferees direct the Army to determine the additional number of V-903 engines it requires. The Army is further directed to consider alternatives to the V-903 engine, including the possibility of acquiring the technical data package, and report the results of these analyses to the congressional defense committees not later than March 1, 1995.

The conferees agree to authorize an additional $5.1 million to continue procuring V-903 engines and direct the Army to reprogram additional funds in fiscal year 1995, and to request adequate funding in fiscal year 1996, if the Army decides to continue production at 730 engines a year.

AMMUNITION ARMY

Overview

The budget request for fiscal year 1995 contained an authorization of $844.6 million for Ammunition Procurement, Army. The Senate bill would authorize $878.1 million. The House amendment would authorize $854.9 million. The conferees recommend authorization of $902.8 million, as delineated in the following table. Unless noted explicitly in the statement of managers, all changes are made without prejudice.

105mm M724A1 DS–TP	−5.0
105mm M724A1 DS–TP tank	−10.0
Upgrade/improvement of AT–4	−5.0
CAD/PAD, all types	−1.36

120 millimeter tank ammunition

The House report (H. Rept. 103–499) directed the Secretary of the Army to maintain the 120 millimeter tank load operation at the Milan Army Ammunition Plant until the Secretary certifies to the congressional defense committees that it would be cost-effective to perform this function elsewhere.

The Senate report (S. Rept. 103–282) contained similar direction.

The conferees agree that fact-of-life changes have negated the need for the Senate and House direction.

OTHER PROCUREMENT, ARMY

Overview

The budget request for fiscal year 1995 contained an authorization of $2,690.2 million for Other Procurement, Army. The Senate bill would authorize $2,677.7 million. The House amendment would authorize $2,651.2 million. The conferees recommend authorization of $2,624.7 million, as delineated in the following table. Unless noted explicitly in the statement of managers, all changes are made without prejudice.

Medium tactical trucks

The budget request contained $382.7 million to procure 3,535 medium trucks under the Army's family of medium tactical truck (FMTV) program.

The Senate bill would authorize the requested amount, but would prohibit obligation of 75 percent of the funds until the Under Secretary of Defense (Acquisition and Technology) reports to the congressional defense committees on a variety of issues.

The House amendment would reduce the requested amount by $50.0 million.

The conferees agree to authorize $364.6 million for this program, without limitations on the obligation of funds. The conferees understand that the Army is considering termination or another lengthy stretch-out of this program in fiscal year 1996, because of budget reductions and because the Army believes that trucks are a lower priority than weapons systems.

The conferees are concerned that the Army's position is short-sighted. Fast-moving projection forces are only as effective as their logistics system. Some of the Army's tactical trucks were built in the early 1950s, and Operation Desert Storm/Desert Shield revealed significant deficiencies. It is a fallacy that the Army could procure adequate trucks in a crisis from the commercial sector.

The Senate report (S. Rept. 103-282) argued that it makes little sense for the Army, Marine Corps, and the reserve components to pursue separate truck modernization programs—all of which are underfunded. The conferees believe this course makes even less sense if FMTV is stretched out further. The conferees endorse the analysis and reporting requirement described in the Senate report and establish a deadline for the report of March 15, 1995. The conferees urge the Secretary of Defense to carefully review the Army's proposed budget for the FMTV program.

Overview

The budget request for fiscal year 1995 contained an authorization of $4,786.3 million for Aircraft Procurement, Navy. The Senate bill would authorize $4,535.6 million. The House amended would authorize $4,588.0 million. The conferees recommend authorization of $4,491.8 million, as delineated in the following table. Unless noted explicitly in the statement of managers, all changes are made without prejudice.

F/A-18 C/D aircraft

The budget request included $1,032.4 million to buy 24 F/A-18 C/D aircraft in fiscal year 1995 and $84.8 million for advance procurement of 24 aircrafts in fiscal year 1996.

The House amendment would approve the requested amount. The House report (H. Rept. 103-499) noted that the Navy is selecting an identification friend or foe (IFF) device. The report also noted that an IFF interrogator/transponder had already been developed for export versions of F/A-18 C/D aircraft. The report directed the Secretary of the Navy to incorporate a non-developmental IFF into the aircraft, beginning with lot 19.

The Senate bill would authorize 17 aircraft and a total of $826.7 million for F/A-18 C/D production and advance procurement. The Senate report (S. Rept. 103-282) stated that 17 aircraft for the Department of the Navy, in addition to foreign sales, would be sufficient to maintain production. The report indicated that the Navy should plan to buy the more capable F/A-18 E/F in greater quantities when that version becomes available.

The conferees agree to provide $934.0 million to buy 24 F/A-18 C/D aircraft in fiscal year 1995 and $84.8 million for advance procurement of 24 aircraft in fiscal year 1996.

The conferees support the House initiative regarding procurement of a non-developmental IFF interrogator/transponder. However, the conferees note that there is more than one non-developmental interrogator/transponder available. Because savings derived from competition could be substantial, the conferees direct the Secretary of the Navy to ensure that the IFF requirement is satisfied through competitive procedures.

CH/MH-53E helicopters

The budget request included $41.1 million for the CH-53 helicopter. The Navy had planned to buy four CH-53E helicopters in fiscal year 1995, but now plans to shift some of its MH-53E and CH-53E helicopters from airborne mine countermeasures (AMCM) and vertical on-board delivery (VOD) squadrons to the Marine Corps. These shifts persuaded the Navy that it could truncate procurement of the CH-53Es at the end of the fiscal year 1994 buy.

The Senate bill would provide an additional $60.0 million for buying four CH-53 helicopters to support Marine Corps and Navy VOD lift requirements and preclude the need to reduce AMCM force structure.

The House amendment would authorize the requested amount.

The conferees agree to provide $41.1 million. The conferees note that these funds were requested for production line shutdown costs on the CH-53 program. The conferees understand that the Marine Corps may desire to use these funds to purchase two additional helicopters rather than terminate the program. The conferees would not object to the use of these funds for this purpose.

EA-6B modifications

The budget request included $38.4 million for EA-6B modifications. The Navy intended to use these funds for various structural and common configuration modifications, including the block 89A, wing center sections, pod hardback, and band 9/10 transmitter modifications.

The Senate bill would authorize the requested amount.

The House bill would not authorize any funds in fiscal year 1995 for EA-6B modifications.

The House and Senate reports (H. Rept. 103-499 and S. Rept. 103-282) directed the Secretary of the Navy to carry out a robust, lower cost alternative to the advanced capability (ADVCAP) upgrade program.

The Senate recedes. The conferees agree to authorize no funds for EA-6B modifications in fiscal year 1995.

The conferees direct the Secretary of the Navy to proceed with a lower cost alternative to the now-terminated advanced capability (DVCAP) upgrade program. Although the conferees are aware that the Navy is awaiting the results of a joint Navy/Air Force airborne electronic warfare (EW) study before commencing any alternative upgrade program for the EA-6B, the conferees are concerned that any delay in initiating these upgrades could foreclose the Navy's ability to capitalize on its prior ADVCAP investment. Furthermore, a failure to capture current technology through delaying the program could result in a requirement for a new aircraft that is unaffordable.

The conferees direct the Secretary of the Navy to immediately commence a modification program to address the structural and supportability problems associated with the EA-6B fleet. The conferees note the availability of the more than $475.0 million authorized and appropriated in fiscal year 1993 and 1994 for the EA-6B1 ADVCAP program, and direct the Secretary of the Navy to use those funds to initiate the structural upgrade program.

The conferees further direct the Secretary to report the results of the joint EW study, together with his recommendations for a lower cost alternative to the ADVCAP upgrade, to the congressional defense committees by December 31, 1994. The conferees specifically prohibit any reprogramming of the remaining prior-year funds for other purposes until the costs of the structural and tactical jamming system upgrades are further committees.

P-3 series modifications

The budget request included $104.3 million for P-3 series modifications.

The Senate bill would approve $136.3 million for P-3 modifications, an increase of $32.0 million from the requested level. Of this amount, the Senate report (S. Rept. 103-282) indicated that $25.0 million would provide for component testing, the development of a logistics and training infrastructure, and the procurement of additional anti-surface warfare (ASUW) improvement program (AIP) systems. The remaining $7.0 million would permit the Navy to complete procurement of new computers for the P-3C update III program, a separate action necessary for P-3 AIP.

The House amendment would approve the requested amount. The House report (H. Rept. 103-499) noted that, between 1991 and the end of fiscal year 1995, the maritime patrol aircraft (MPA) force structure will have been reduced from 37 squadrons to 22 squadrons. The House report expressed concern that the Navy may be reducing its MPA force structure too quickly. The House report directed the Secretary of the Navy to submit a report describing how the loss of operational capability that would result from a reduction in MPA force structure below 22 squadrons could be offset by other Navy or Department of Defense assets.

The conferees agree to approve the requested amount and reiterate the requirement that the Secretary of the Navy provide the report originally required by the House report.

Multipoint refueling modifications

The budget request contained $25.8 million for making multipoint refueling modifications to KC-135 tanker aircraft.

The Senate bill would delete these funds, based on information that the Air Force had canceled the program.

The House amendment would authorize the requested amount for multipoint modifications.

The conferees are concerned by the slow progress in providing multipoint refueling capability for Air Force KC-135 tanker aircraft. The conferees recently learned of a relatively inexpensive French modification program carried out in the United States to provide multipoint refueling for French KC-135 tankers. Therefore, the conferees encourage the Secretary of Defense to establish an aerial refueling initiative to consider a commercial program for KC-135 multipoint refueling.

To ensure that interoperability and low cost solutions are considered, the initiative should be administered with the oversight of the Under Secretary of Defense for Acquisition and Technology, relying on advice and support from Air Force and Navy representatives.

Because multipoint refueling provides relatively more improvements for Navy aircraft, the conferees agree to provide the fiscal year 1995 funds to the Navy. The conferees recommend $25.8 million for this initiative in the aircraft procurement, Navy account. The conferees understand that the initiative is included in the Future Years Defense Program and applaud the Secretary's interoperability initiatives.

Overview

The budget request for fiscal year 1995 contained an authorization of $2,400.0 million for Weapons Procurement, Navy. The Senate bill would authorize $2,428.5 million. The House amendment would authorize $2,223.2 million. The conferees recommend authorization of $2,076.6 million, as delineated in the following table. Unless noted explicitly in the statement of managers, all changes are made without prejudice.

Tomahawk missile procurement

The Senate bill would approve the requested amount.

The House amendment would authorize the procurement of 217 missiles, but would reduce the requested amount by $40.0 million.

The conferees agree to a reduction of $11.9 million from the requested amount, consisting of:

(1) $2.6 million for an unsubstantiated pricing adjustment associated with the fiscal year 1994 selection of a single prime contractor; and

(2) $9.3 million for the capsule launch system (CLS) for submarines.

The conferees encourage the Navy to present its CLS projected inventory objective, and rationale for that inventory objective, with the fiscal year 1996 budget submission. The conferees intend to specifically exempt from this reduction funds budgeted for the Tomahawk precision strike initiative.

Reactor components and nuclear alterations

The budget request included $194.7 million for the Navy to procure reactor components and $156.8 million to make alterations to nuclear power systems.

The Senate bill would approve the requested amounts.

The House amendment would reduce the reactor component request by $14.7 million and would reduce the nuclear alterations request by $36.8 million.

The conferees agree to provide the requested amounts. The conferees note that the budget justification materials for these two programs leave much to be desired. There is insufficient information to relate specific component procurement to specific ship upgrades. Neither can alteration expenses be related to installation schedules. The conferees find it unacceptable that the budget justification material does not provide the necessary information.

The conferees are dismayed by the attempts to scare members of Congress about the effects of potential reductions in these programs. The conferees believe that the Navy could have applied such effort more productively to providing the answers to legitimate questions.

The conferees are also unsure about the veracity of the claims made in some of the Navy Department's information papers. Claimed economic impacts on various geographic areas greatly exceeded the total potential reductions being considered. Accordingly, the DOD Inspector General is directed to investigate the accuracy of the Navy information papers prepared for the Congress on this matter, with specific attention to the economic impacts claimed, and to report his findings and recommendations to the Congress by December 31, 1994.

SATCOM ship terminals

The budget request included $126.4 million for procurement of SATCOM ship terminals.

The Senate bill would authorize the requested amount.

The House amendment would reduce the requested amount by $20.0 million.

The conferees agree to reduce the requested amount by $10.0 million, without prejudice.

PROCUREMENT, MARINE CORPS

Overview

The budget request for fiscal year 1995 contained an authorization of $554.6 million for Procurement, Marine Corps. The Senate bill would authorize $528.9 million. The House amendment would authorize $528.4 million. The conferees recommend authorization of $403.4 million, as delineated in the following table. Unless noted explicitly in the statement of managers, all changes are made without prejudice.

AMMUNITION, NAVY AND MARINE CORPS

Overview

The budget request, the Senate bill, and the House amendment contained no separate accounts for ammunition programs of the Navy and the Marine Corps. These programs were funded within the Weapons Procurement, Navy and the Procurement, Marine Corps accounts, respectively. The conferees recommend authorization of $449.8 million for these programs in a new Ammunition, Navy and Marine Corps account as delineated in the following table. Unless noted explicitly in the statement of the managers, all changes are made without prejudice.

E-4 procurement

The budget request contained $35.2 million for modification of E-4 command post aircraft.

The Senate bill would authorize the requested amount.

The House amendment would reduce the requested amount by $10.0 million and would require a report on possible additional missions for the E-4 in the post-Cold War era.

The conferees agree to authorize the requested amount, but limit the obligation of $10.0 million until the Secretary of Defense submits the report called for in the House report (H. Rept. 103-499).

Bomber improvements

The Senate bill would provide $90.0 million for improved interim conventional weapons for heavy bombers.

The House amendment would provide $100.0 million for both accelerating conventional weapon upgrades on B-1B bombers and for transferring heavy bombers from attrition reserve status to the active inventory.

The conferees agree to recommend the following funding:

(1) $37.5 million for testing and conversion of the nuclear air-launched cruise missile to conventional weapons capability;

(2) $40.0 million for the acquisition of GPS-aided munition system (GAMS) weapons and for testing of the brilliant anti-tank (BAT) submunition in a tactical munitions dispenser;

(3) $5.3 million in procurement and $18.1 million in operation and maintenance funds for the restoration of 24 B-52H bombers from attrition reserve status to active status; and

(4) $16.9 million for the acceleration of the integration of the joint direct attack munitions (JDAM) family of weapons onto the B-1B bomber.

AMMUNITION, AIR FORCE

Overview

The budget request, the Senate bill, and the House amendment contained no separate account for Air Force ammunition programs. Those programs were funded within the Weapons Procurement, Air Force account. The conferees recommend authorization of $251.5 million for these programs in a new Ammunition, Air Force account as delineated in the following table. Unless noted explicitly in the statement of the managers, all changes are made without prejudice.

SR–71 reconnaissance aircraft

The budget request did not include funding for SR–71 aircraft.

The Senate bill would provide $100.0 million in research and development, split equally between the national foreign intelligence program (NFIP) and tactical intelligence and related activities (TIARA) program budgets, to reactivate the SR–71 aircraft to provide a contingency reconnaissance capability. The Senate initiative depended on a determination of whether the costs would be acceptable and a viable contingency capability could be acquired for $100.0 million.

The House amendment contained no similar funding.

The conferees agree to provide $100.0 million to reactivate the SR–71 to provide an interim contingency reconnaissance capability to be managed by the Defense Airborne Reconnaissance Office for the purposes described in the Senate report (S. Rept. 103–282). The Secretary of Defense shall provide to the congressional defense committees classified and unclassified reports by January 1, 1995, detailing the following:

(1) how the SR–71 could be integrated into the Department's reconnaissance modernization plan;

(2) how the SR–71 will contribute additional capabilities to the Department's reconnaissance and intelligence collection capability;

(3) the time it will take to fully reactivate the SR–71; and

(4) the effect on the Future Years Defense Program of the costs to provide this additional reconnaissance capability until new endurance UAVs are fielded.

PROCUREMENT, NATIONAL GUARD AND RESERVE EQUIPMENT

Overview

The budget request for fiscal year 1995 contained no funds for Procurement, National Guard and Reserve Equipment. The Senate bill would authorize $600.0 million. The House amendment would authorize $787.2 million. The conferees recommend authorization of $510.0 million, as delineated in the following table. Unless noted explicitly in the statement of managers, all changes are made without prejudice.

National Guard and reserve equipmentI90[H12AU4-B1071]National G

The budget request included no funds in the National Guard and reserve equipment procurement account.

The Senate bill would provide $600.0 million. The Senate report (S. Rept. 103–282) provided these funds in broad categories, such as medical equipment, aviation and aeromedical equipment, construction and transportation equipment, and electronic and communications equipment. The report also indicated that the funds should be focused toward those activities that meet important military needs, and also enhance the capability of the reserve components to assist civilian authorities.

The House amendment would provide $787.2 million. The House report (H. Rept. 103–499) allocated these funds to some specific programs and some generic categories.

The conferees agree to provide $510.0 million, as indicated in the following table. The conferees note that they have provided $130.0 million in the Army missile procurement account to buy a battalion of multiple launch rocket system (MLRS) launchers for the Army National Guard.

The conferees agree that the funds in this account should be made available in a generic category that will:

(1) give the reserve components maximum flexibility to identify their highest priority requirements and apply resources to filling those requirements; and

(2) allow the purchases to enhance activities that meet important military needs, and also enhance the capability of the reserve components to assist civilian authorities.

The conferees also agree that none of the funds in these areas be obligated until the Chief of the National Guard Bureau and the head of each reserve component have reported on the proposed use of such funds, in accordance with established reprogramming procedures.

CHEMICAL AGENTS AND MUNITIONS DESTRUCTION, DEFENSE

Overview

The budget request for fiscal year 1995 contained an authorization of $575.3 million for Chemical Agents and Munitions Destruction, Defense. The Senate bill would authorize $590.1 million. The House amendment would authorize $670.3 million. The conferees recommend authorization of $599.5 million, as delineated in the following table. Unless noted explicitly in the statement of managers, all changes are made without prejudice.

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS

LEGISLATIVE PROVISIONS ADOPTED

Chemical agents and munitions destruction program (secs. 107, 142, and 143)

The budget request included $575.3 million for the chemical agents and munitions destruction program.

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 106) that would authorize $590.1 million for the program; authorize obligation of fiscal year 1994 appropriations for research, development, test, and evaluation for chemical agents and munitions destruction in title VI of Public Law 103–139; and amend Section 1412(f) of the Department of Defense Authorization Act of Fiscal Year 1986 to require military construction funds for the chemical agents and munitions destruction program to be included in separate defense accounts.

The House amendment contained a provision (sec. 107) that would authorize $670.3 million for the program. The House amendment also contained a provision (sec. 1040) that would prohibit transportation of the unitary stockpile from one state to another state, and would allow chemical munitions that are not part of the unitary stockpile, which are discovered or come under the control of the Department of Defense, to be transported to the nearest chemical munitions storage facility that has the necessary permits to receive and store such items.

The conferees agree to authorize $599.5 million for the chemical agents and munitions destruction program, an increase of $24.2 million to the requested amount. The conferees recommend that, of the funds provided for procurement, $22.5 million be available for the procurement of carbon filtration systems and ancillary equipment for the pollution abatement system at Tooele Army Depot and equipment modification design for all sites. Of the funds authorized for operation and maintenance, the conferees recommend that $8.0 million be available to support Army implementation of the National Research Council (NRC) recommendations to update risk assessments for storage, handling, and disposal activities at each site; enhance the stockpile surveillance program; and implement a public outreach program. Of the funds authorized for research and development, the conferees recommend $11.3 million for the nonstockpile program and $9.4 million for alternative technologies to the baseline program.

The conferees agree to authorize $25.0 million appropriated for development of alternative technologies in the Department of Defense Appropriations Act for Fiscal Year 1994. Of this amount, $4.3 million shall be available for completion of the cryofracture design and $20.7 million shall be available for development of alternative technologies to the baseline program.

The Senate report (S. Rept. 103–282) recommended making $2.0 million available from funds authorized for development of alternative technologies for programs to detect low-level exposure to chemical agents. The conferees endorse the Senate position and direct the Army to work with the national weapons laboratories on these programs.

In its report to Congress on alternative technologies to the baseline program, the NRC recommended that the Army continue to monitor developments in this area. The Army has notified the conferees of its plans to implement this recommendation by awarding a contract to monitor and evaluate various research activities in alternative technologies that have continued in development since the NRC report was published. The conferees direct the Army to report to the congressional defense committees on any emerging findings resulting from this contract and to pursue demonstration of promising alternatives to either the baseline process or to neutralization.

The conferees agree to the House provision that would prohibit transportation of a chemical munition that is part of the unitary stockpile in one state to another, and that would allow the transportation of nonstockpile chemical munitions that are discovered, or which come under the control of the Department of Defense, in one state to the nearest chemical munitions stockpile storage facility.

The conferees agree to amend section 1412(f) of Public Law 99–145 to require funds for military construction projects for the chemical agents and munitions destruction program to be included in the budget in separate defense accounts. Therefore, the conferees transfer the funds contained in the fiscal year 1995 Army budget request for the military construction of chemical agents and munitions destruction facilities to a separate defense-wide account.

Multiyear procurement authority for M1A2 tank upgrades (sec. 111)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 111) that would authorize the multiyear procurement of M1A2 tank upgrades.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The conferees agree that a multiyear procurement of M1A2 tank upgrades would benefit the Army. The conferees are concerned, however, about the Army's current proposal to reduce funding for the upgrade program substantially over the next several years, and the effect this reduction would have on the Army's ability to execute an appropriate multiyear procurement and maintain a viable industrial base. The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to carefully review the Army's budget proposal for M1A2 tank upgrades.

Avenger (sec. 111)

The budget request included $13.8 million for the Avenger program.

The Senate bill would authorize the requested amount for Avenger procurement.

The House amendment would deny the requested amount on the grounds that it is excess to program requirements.

The Department of Defense has recently requested authority to reprogram $10.4 million in fiscal year 1994 Avenger funding. The conferees agree to reduce the fiscal year 1995 Avenger procurement request by $8.4 million and to deny the reprogramming request.

The conferees learned that the Avenger multiyear procurement contract will expire in fiscal year 1995, before the Marine Corps and other services can take advantage of the Army's contract and favorable pricing terms. The conferees, therefore, agree to a provision that would grant a one-year extension of the Avenger multiyear procurement authority. The Army, as the contracting agency, may incorporate this extension into contract number DAAH01–92–C–0023.

The conferees agree to this request with the understanding that there will be no additional costs for extending the delivery schedule. The conferees note that DOD must request funds for 113 fire units in fiscal year 1996 to meet the terms of the multiyear procurement contract. The conferees point out that the fiscal year 1996 budget request must request funds either for these fire units or for contract termination costs.

Transfer of replacement Army tanks to Marine Corps Reserve (sec. 112)

The Senate bill would provide $108.0 million more than the requested amount to fund an additional 24 M1A2 tank upgrades for the Army. The Senate bill also contained a provision (sec. 112) that would direct the Secretary of the Army to transfer, either simultaneously or in advance, one M1A2 common tank to the Marine Corps Reserve as each one of these additional M1A2 tanks is made available to the Army. The Senate intended this to be the first year of a two-year program to eliminate a shortfall of 48 tanks in the Marine Corps Reserve tank battalions.

The House amendment contained no similar provision and funding.

The House recedes.

Transfer of M1A1 tanks to the Marine Corps (sec. 113)

The Senate bill included a provision (sec. 1066) that would require the Army to transfer 84 M1A1 tanks to the Marine Corps. The provision would require that, as two M1A1 tanks become excess to the active Army's inventory requirements, one tank would be transferred to the National Guard, and one tank would be transferred to the Marine Corps, up to a total of 84 tanks for each. Thereafter, the Army would transfer all excess M1A1 tanks to the National Guard.

The House amendment included no similar provision. The House report (H. Rept. 103–499) directed the Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff to review the M1A1 tank allocation and report to Congress on the results of that review.

The House recedes.

The conferees agree that this transfer should not be construed as a precedent for directing additional transfers of equipment between military services in the future. The conferees take this action to fill critical tank deficiencies in the active Marine Corps.

The conferees expect the Commission on Roles and Missions to review the allocation of armor among the services. The conferees believe that the Commission should consider the advice of the combatant commanders in this area as in the others on which they will provide advice. The conferees request the Commission to include any recommendations that it may have in its final report.

Exception to mandatory retirement of OV–1 aircraft for aircraft deployed in Korea (sec. 114)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 113) that would permit the Army to use funds saved by the early retirement of OV–1 surveillance aircraft in Korea to lease a replacement surveillance capability, provided that the lease meets certain conditions. The provision also would amend existing law to permit the Army to maintain and operate OV–1 aircraft beyond fiscal year 1995.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes with an amendment that would permit the Army to continue to operate and maintain the OV–1s currently deployed in Korea beyond fiscal year 1995.

The conferees emphasize that the joint surveillance and target attack radar system (JSTARS) is the only wide-area moving target indicator radar program in the Department of Defense. The conferees are prepared to support an interim indications and warning capability for Korea until the Republic of Korea assumes responsibility for the mission, if the Secretary of Defense determines that the OV–1 is not sufficient and that it is impractical to use JSTARS in this role. The conferees do not support acquisition by the Army of a new aircraft for this mission. The conferees direct the Secretary of Defense to inform the congressional defense committees promptly of his decisions on surveillance support in Korea.

Joint service small arms program (sec. 115)

The Senate bill contained a provision (sec. 114) that would authorize the multiyear procurement of small arms to meet the inventory objectives of the army and to sustain a reduced industrial base over an extended period until follow-on weapons are ready for production. The provision also would authorize additional funds for small arms development and require development of a small arms master plan.

The House amendment contained no similar provision.

The House recedes.

The conferees direct the Army to procure as many weapons as possible within the funding levels provided.

The conferees note that, in response to previous congressional direction, the Under Secretary of Defense (Acquisition and Technology) has completed an assessment of management initiatives to improve the transition of small arms technologies from the technology base to development and to ensure full coordination of the joint service small arms program and individual service-unique small arms programs. The conferees support these actions and direct that they be reflected in the revised joint service small arms master plan required by the Senate provision.

Bunker defeat munition (sec. 116)

The budget request included $2.6 million in RDT&E in PE 64802 and $7.8 million for procurement of the bunker defeat munition (BDM).

The senate bill included a provision (sec. 115) that would authorize $7.8 million to permit the Army to procure up to 6,000 type-classified standard BDM rounds and $2.6 million in RDT&E accounts for type-classification of the weapon.

The House amendment would deny funding for BDM.

The House recedes with an amendment. The conferees agree to deny RDT&E funds and to provide $7.1 million to procure no more than 6,000 BDM weapons. The conferees agree that a limited procurement of BDM munitions is reasonable to provide an interim capability for one light division until the SRAW/MPIM is ready for fielding. No RDT&E funds are authorized because the BDM can be type-classified for limited procurement for contingency operations without additional funds.

The army is joining the Marine Corps to develop a weapon which combines the capabilities of the Marine Corps short-range antiarmor weapon (SRAW) with the warhead technology developed in the Army's multipurpose individual munition (MPIM) program. This effort should result in a lightweight, shoulder-fired, low-signature/backblast general purpose weapon system that should be ready for fielding around fiscal year 2000.

Procurement of helicopters (sec. 117)
